CIA Poison Found

NEW YORK (Reuter) — Two containers of a mass poison developed by the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) have been found in a Maryland warehouse, the New York Times says.

The paper reported today that the poison had been ordered destroyed by then president Richard Nixon in November, 1969, as part of a program to limit chemical-biological-warfare production.

But, the paper says, a middle-level CIA employee preserved the two containers, said to be capable of killing the population of a small city.

The Times says the Senate intelligence committee has judged the matter to be of such importance that it has scheduled public hearings next week to examine why procedures for handling such matters were so lax.

INCREASE HIGHEST IN CANADA

B.C. Jobless Hits 9.2%

OTTAWA (CP) — Unemployment in B.C. rose 1.3 per cent in August bringing the jobless toll to 9.2 per cent or 104,000 persons. The B.C. increase was the highest in Canada and showed a jump of 34,000 unemployed from August, 1974.

Statistics Canada reported today the national unemployment rate increased by one-tenth of one per cent in August, maintaining for the sixth straight month the worst jobless rate in 14 years.

The August rate was 7.3 per cent. The rate had remained at 7.2 per cent for the previous five months, except for May when it dipped to 7.1 per cent.

This is the worst rate since 1961, when it stayed above seven per cent for 13 months before dropping to 6.8 per cent in August of that year.

The August jobless rate declined this year in three provinces. Ontario was down one-tenth of one per cent to 6.2 and Alberta dropped three-tenths of one per cent to 4.1 per cent. The Saskatchewan rate dropped two-tenths of one per cent to 2.7 giving that province the lowest rate in the country.

The rate increased in all other provinces. Newfoundland continued to have the highest rate at 21 per cent, up 1.1 per cent from July.

Nationally, there were fewer jobs available in August than in July and the number of people seeking work did not drop at the same rate, leading to higher unemployment. The statistics are adjusted for seasonal variations, which economists regard as a more accurate measure.

On an actual basis, 623,000 were officially unemployed in August.

Student unemployment dropped to 4.8 per cent in August from 8.1 per cent in July — consistent with the annual pattern — although the rate remained higher than the last two years. Student unemployment was 3.7 per cent for August in both 1973 and 1974.

On a seasonally-adjusted basis, unemployment increased for all age groups. The jobless rate for those 24 and younger increased four-tenths of one per cent to 12.7 and the rate for those 25 and older jumped one-tenth of one per cent to 5.4 per cent.

Male unemployment increased two-tenths of one per cent to 7.7 per cent, while the jobless rate for women re-

CRIME WORST IN THE WEST

TORONTO (CP)—A British Columbia criminologist said Monday that people face an increasing risk of falling victim to violent crime the closer they get to Canada's West Coast.

Prof. Ezzat Pattah said some provinces tend to be more violence prone than others.

"The study of trends and patterns of violent criminal activity in Canada shows that violent offences tend to increase as we move from the east to the west of the country with only a very few exceptions," he said. Pattah is director of the criminology department Simon Fraser University in Burnaby.

Figures published by Statistics Canada in a national crime report this year support such an east-to-west pattern.

The report said that for the first quarter of 1975, Newfoundland had 94 crimes of violence for each 100,000 population.

Prince Edward Island had 61, Nova Scotia 95, New Brunswick, 80, Quebec, 81, Ontario, 128, Manitoba, 115, Saskatchewan, 159, Alberta, 179, and British Columbia 193.

Newfoundland's rape rate per 100,000 citizens was .74 while British Columbia's was 2.55.

Paris Defies Greenpeace Pay Order

VANCOUVER (CP) — The French government has decied to defy its own courts and will not pay stage one of a settlement ordered in the Greenpeace III ramming case, a Greenpeace spokesman said Monday.

Dave McTaggart, captain of the anti-nuclear testing mission, said in an interview from Paris that the only recourse he has to enforce the order is public opinion or pressure from the Canadian government.

The court ordered the government to pay 2,000 francs (about $500) for a damage survey of the Greenpeace vessel and then to pay the amount of damages determined by the survey, McTaggart said.

McTaggart said his lawyer, Thierry Garby-Lacrouts contacted the government lawyer, Jean Gallot, Monday and was told: "No, we're not paying."

McTaggart said Garby-Lacrouts advised him that he has no legal recourse if the government simply chooses to defy the court order.

Upended Volkswagen . . . sign of Boston violence

Lynch-Law Sentiments Surface in Boston

By PAUL WHITELAW
Special to The Times

BOSTON, Mass. — "Let us at 'em, we'll give 'em a fair trial, we'll tie 'em to a tree."

The pudgy, middle-aged white woman shouted her epithet to a crowd of several hundred sympathetic onlookers and riot-equipped policemen from the steps of the ramshackle district courthouse of South Boston. Inside, 74 whites and blacks arrested Monday as they attempted to demonstrate support of school desegregation in this city were being arraigned on charges of distrubing the peace.

Moments later police moved in. They closed off traffic along the street in front of the courthouse, dispersing the crowd so authorities could safely evacuate the demonstrators to a less volatile area of the city, where they were released.

The women's threat on the courthouse steps was, of course, more rhetorical than real because Boston bought a tense racial peace Monday on the first day of school.

Sections of this city looked as though they were under military occupation as 1,600 local policemen, state troopers, federal marshals and FBI agents patrolled the streets and guarded schools.

Authorities told reporters Monday night that they were pleased the first day of school and attempts to desegregate classes by busing children between white and black neighborhoods — were marked by relatively few violent incidents.

In addition to the pro-busing demonstrators arraigned in South Boston court, only about a dozen other people — opponents of federal-enforced integration — were arrested.

But assistant district attorney John Caffney didn't mince words as he told reporters the first day of school was no more than a volatile crease-fire in this troubled city.

"If it weren't for the police, these people would have been slaughtered," he said, referring to pro-busing demonstrators.

The busing of thousands of pupils here and in Louisville, Ky., went off without major incident today.

Yellow school buses escorted by motorcycle policemen quietly carried pupils to classes in Boston, where attendance today appeared to be higher than on Monday, when absenteeism touched the 40 per cent mark.

Harassment By Police Called Off

MONTREAL (CP) — Montreal police will call off their pressure tactics Wednesday and seek new ways to speed up settlement of a dispute with the city involving better working conditions in a 1975 contract, a police spokesman said today.

Earlier today, policemen stopped some large trucks going in and out of the Olympics construction site for spot checks. No traffic disruptions were reported in other areas of the city as had been the case Monday.

Angry motorists were delayed up to two hours during Monday night's peak traffic period as police tried to force a contract settlement by using harassment tactics.

They stopped drivers at key thoroughfares to check car registrations and automobile trunks.

Quebec Provincial Police (QPP) officers were on standby.

Charles Brunet, vice-president of the brotherhood, said Gilbert Custeau, president, met with Premier Robert Bourassa Monday and received assurances the premier would do all he could to settle the conflict.

Brunet said the only problems to be solved involved working conditions.

Mail Strike . . . Dates Vary

OTTAWA (CP) — Possible dates for the beginning of a legal strike by the country's 22,000 inside postal workers vary from early next week to the middle of October.

But if there is to be a strike, past practice indicates it will probably not come before two or three weeks elapse.

If a strike occurs, it will follow the failure of conciliation efforts to resolve the lengthy contract dispute between the government and the Canadian Union of Postal Workers. Postmaster-General Bryce Mackasey said Monday he hopes a walkout can be avoided.

But Mackasey said he would be prepared in the event of a national postal strike to shut down the post office for two or three months.

In a speech to officials of the paper envelope industry, Mackasey said there might be a long strike if the union sticks to its demands for a 71-per-cent pay increase over one year and a 30-hour workweek.

Under the federal Public Service Staff Relations Act, which applies to the postal workers, a strike cannot start legally until seven days after a conciliation report is delivered to the chairman of the public service staff relations board. The board is a quasi-judicial federal agency that deals with government-employee disputes.

As conciliation efforts were to end today, union spokesmen have contended that a strike can begin as early as Sept. 15.

But the realities of collective bargaining with the federal government likely will set the strike date back several days or even weeks.

Mackasey has said there is not likely to be a legal strike, if one does occur, within a month.

The process is as follows:

Judge Jean Moisan of the Quebec Superior Court, the conciliation chairman, will prepare a report after the conciliation talks conclude. His report may be lengthy, dealing with several complex issues such as wage demands, technological change and fringe benefits, which have not yet been dealt with in negotiations.

After his report is prepared, Irving Gaul and Guy Dancrosse, the union and government appointees to the conciliation board, will add their remarks or perhaps prepare separate reports.

Then the reports must be translated to fulfil requirements of the official languages' policy.

The seven-days rule will apply after preparation, transportation and delivery of reports—a process that might set the legal strike date back to October.

IWA Rams Pulp Pickets

FORT ST. JAMES — International Woodworkers of America members pushed through a pulp union picket line here Monday and the line was withdrawn today as the pulp union waits for reaction from the IWA head office.

Tom Haworth, second vice-president of the Prince George local of the Pulp, Paper and Woodworkers of Canada, said today PPWC officials had contacted IWA leaders to see whether the picket line crossing would be continued.

Haworth said the union was still waiting for a reaction from the IWA and until then, the picket line was withdrawn.

"We also contacted the local IWA executive, but they are also waiting to hear from headquarters. I don't think that the action was in any way planned by the executive," said Haworth.

An IWA spokesman in Vancouver said as yet there was no reaction from union leaders.

Prince George PPWC president Len Shankel said about 60 IWA members Monday stormed through a PPWC picket line, tearing up picket signs. The PPWC had set up the line in front of the Takla Forest Products mill in Fort St. James employing IWA members.

"The crossing of the picket lines by IWA members makes it simple," Shankel said Monday. "They have joined the employers' battle against the employees."

Haworth said another picket line was set up this morning at a sawmill in Prince George, but IWA members did not cross.

Meanwhile in Vancouver Art Gruntman, western regional vice-president of the Canadian Paperworkers Union, says the union will expand activities against Weldwood of Canada, the last of the nine major integrated forest companies and will shut down all Weldwood operations in the Greater Vancouver area during the next few days.

Pulp workers have been on strike since July 16.

Beryl Repeats Plea

OTTAWA (CP) — Beryl Plumptre, chairman of the federal food prices review board, has renewed a call for direct intervention by the British Columbia government in an industrial dispute that has closed Vancouver-area supermarkets.

In a telegram to Premier Dave Barrett Tuesday, she said the board is "disappointed" by the reaction of the B.C. government to a call by the board for intervention last week.

"No useful reaction has yet been heard from either you or the minister of consumer services who, one might have thought, would have been particularly eager to demonstrate some concern on behalf of the B.C. consumer," the telegram says.

Plumptre said the negotiations will have a far-reaching effect on negotiations in other industries, both in B.C. and in other provinces.

"If you maintain a 'hands-off policy' there will almost certainly be an excessively high settlement," she said. She offered to discuss the dispute with Barrett by telephone or in person.

Law Divorced from Reality, UN Told

GENEVA (AP) — Existing legal systems in the western world tend to be divorced from reality and are powerless when confronted by the international criminal, says a committee of the United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime.

The committee's report, to be considered at a plenary session later this week, was published Monday. It referred to such general problems as over-burdened courts, inadequacies in law systems, overloaded prisons and the difficulties of dealing with professional criminals.

The committee suggests that criminals seem more capable than police of gaining advantages through technical progress and the question arises "whether it was not necessary to rethink the whole basis of criminal policy and justice."

The report says that, in most countries there are distortions between the requirements of the law and the needs of the people. It says "It must be concluded that most judicial systems are biased" since the underprivileged classes are unquestionably over-represented among the people prosecuted.

In many countries, the report maintains, people no longer have confidence in a justice they consider either too indulgent or too severe.

"Justice seems unrelated to social reality; its notions, criteria, setting and speech are alien to real life. There is a certain social schrizophrenia on criminal justice. Divorced from reality, criminal justice no longer guarantees the safety of citizens and often seems uninterested in certain socially harmful situations."

Criminal law is attacked in the report as an "excessively static sub-system of social control." Its image is "to a large extent rendered sacred and ritualized by texts more understandable to officialdom than to the public." It can be termed "discriminatory" because it is exercised against traditional forms of crimes and is unable to act against "socially harmful acts made immune because they were historically built into the political and economic structure."

The report also points to the "guilded" criminals — men with political and economic power — who can escape detection. They may be compared to some law functionaries who abuse their power, but remain unpunished.

Area Grits Planning Policy Session

A pre-convention meeting of the B.C. Liberal party's lower Vancouver Island region will outline election prospects to constituency members Sept. 18 in the Century Inn.

The meeting will elect and help prepare delegates to the party's provincial convention to be held in Vancouver Sept. 26-28, and also choose delegates for the national Liberal convention in Ottawa Nov. 7-9.

In addition, members will elect a regional vice-president and hear provincial party president Doreen Braverman report on provincial election plans.

Four lower island constituencies comprise the regional association — Victoria, Oak Bay, Saanich and the Islands, and Esquimalt.

The presidents of each are behind provincial Liberal leader David Anderson, who is expected to be challenged for the leadership at the Vancouver convention by North Vancouver-Capilano MLA Gordon Gibson.

Irma Dunn, president of Victoria Liberals, said support is being polished for delivery at the convention. Both Lee Jamison, of Oak Bay, and Pat Strachan, of Esquimalt, endorse the moderate philosophy of Liberalism espoused by Anderson, Saanich president Dr. J. W. Anderson said his members do favor Anderson, but noted the leader is chosen by the convention as a whole.

Esquimalt District Liberal Association will hold its local nominating convention Sept. 24 at 8 p.m. in St. Paul's parish hall, 1379 Esquimalt Road.

Boundary Meeting Sept. 30

A public hearing into redistribution of electoral districts will be held in Victoria on Sept. 30, the office of Provincial Secretary Ernie Hall announced today.

The hearing will be held in the Georgian Lounge at the Empress between 10 a.m. and 5 p.m.

The announcement was made as the three-man redistribution commission left for Terrace this morning to begin its province-wide sweep of 29 communities. The hearings will end Oct. 16 in Rossland.

The purpose of the meetings is to discuss the implications of electoral boundary changes and accept briefs and proposals from the public.

The commission is made up of Tom Norris, former appeal court justice; Frederick Bowers, a University of B.C. English professor; and Lawrie Wallace, deputy provincial secretary.

According to terms of reference detailed in the order-in-council of July 21 which set up the inquiry, the commission will look into historical and regional claims for representation. The commission's final proposals will suggest a legislature comprised of not fewer than 55 members, the present figure, and not more than 62. Consideration will also be given to establishing multiple-member ridings in areas of high population density.

This week the commission will be in Terrace, Prince Rupert, Smithers, Burns Lake and New Westminster. Next week it will travel to Chilliwack, Haney, Surrey and Vancouver. The week following to Dawson Creek, Fort St. John, Prince George, Williams Lake and Kamloops.

After its hearing in Victoria, the commission will go up island holding a meeting at 10 a.m., Oct. 1 in Duncan courthouse, and another the same day at 9 p.m. in Nanaimo. Then it stops at Alberni and Courtenay on Oct. 2 and Powell River Oct. 3.

The remaining two weeks will take the commission to communities in the Okanagan and Kootenay districts.

Scouts Increase

GENEVA (Reuter) — The number of Boy Scouts throughout the world last year totalled 14 million, an increase of 6.8 per cent over the last census carried out in 1972, the youth organization's central office reported Monday.

Moslem-Christian Battles Spreading in Lebanon

Times News Services

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Fighting between Moslem and Christian militias today spread from war-ravaged Tripoli to two neighboring villages where rampaging gumen battled with bullets and bombs.

Police sources said at least 50 persons were killed and scores injured in fighting Monday, pushing the casualty toll for nine days of strife in Northern Lebanon to nearly 300.

"The situation is deteriorating very badly," said Interior Minister Camille Chamoun. "Things are very grave."

Latest reports from Tripoli said hundreds of Moslem leftists had descended on the Christian villages of Zghorta about nine miles to the east and Majdlaya, about five miles away.

Unconfirmed newspaper reports in Beirut said as many as 3,000 armed men from Tripoli were pitted against 2,000 militiamen in Zghorta.

In Washington meanwhile, Congress is considering adding restrictions aimed at preventing United States involvement in a Mideast was to its approval of American technicians to monitor the Sinai peace accord.

One restriction, proposed by Senator Frank Church (Dem. Idaho) would be to pull out the technicians if war erupts. The second would enable Congress to withdraw the technicians at any time.

Chairman Thomas Morgan of the House of Representatives international relations committee said House and Senate staff aides are working on language for the two proposals. Church said last week that a mandatory withdrawal in case of hostilities would greatly reduce the risk of U.S. involvement in a renewed Middle East war.

Morgan indicated the provision for Congress withdrawing the technicians at any time would assure uneasy congressmen that if the United Nations peacekeeping force was suddenly removed, for example, Congress would be in a position to remove the technicians.

State Secretary Henry Kissinger told Morgan's committee Monday that President Ford is willing to accept mandatory removal of the technicians in case of war.

Ford's mail is runing about 10 to 1 against the stationing of the technicians in the Sinai, a White House aide said Monday.

The presidential aide said 511 letters against the proposal had been received, compared to 54 in support of such an American presence in the Middle East. He said another 26 took no clear-cut position.

U.S. EYEING TARIFFS ON IMPORTED AUTOS

WASHINGTON (CP) — In a surprise announcement, the U.S. International Trade Commission ruled today that the sale of cars imported from Canada and seven other countries can be considered a factor in the depressed state of the domestic automobile industry.

The 4-to-2 ruling means that the investigation of alleged dumping — selling cars in the U.S. at less than they sell for in the country of origin — will continue.

The investigation now goes back to the treasury department for a formal six-month inquiry.

If the department concludes that dumping is going on, the investigation will shift again to the ITC for determination of how badly such sales are injuring — or likely to injure — the U.S. industry.

This might result in additional duties on companies importing cars from Canada, West Germany, Japan, Britain, Italy, France, Belgium and Sweden.

Bottled Beer Supply Dries

Beer stocks at Greater Victoria vendors varied today from none to moderate as some customers take to hoarding supplies still being brewed and delivered by Labatt's brewery.

There was no further spread of the strike of warehousemen and truck drivers belonging to the Brewery Workers' Union as far as Victoria is concerned, although beer distribution in the interior was threatened with picketing.

Employees of Pacific Brewers Distributors Ltd. in Victoria, Nanaimo, Vancouver and Kamloops have brought to a halt the flow of bottled and draught beer normally supplied to vendors and licensed premises. But brewery employees belonging to the same union here are not on strike and those liquor stores and hotels normally supplied directly by Labatt's trucks continue to be served.

Eight of the nine vendors in the Greater Victoria area are supplied directly by Labatt's, which is delivering two of its brands of bottled beer as production dictates. There has been a shortage of empty bottles, but the brewery has been able to make do so far with new glass and some returns from Courtenay area where Pacific Brewers is not yet struck.

Only the Government Street store was without beer this morning, but a delivery was expected. Most other stores had either just had deliveries of normal stocks or still had quantities on hand sufficient to last the week.

The Colwood outlet reported slim stock and uncertain delivery, although the Langford store had a fair supply on hand.

The Sidney liquor store has no domestic beer and will get none until the strike is settled.

All stores report an acute storage problem for empty bottles, which are not being collected while truckers are out. The Liquor Administration Branch is considering suspending bottle refunding as the empties pile up.

JOBLESS JUMPS

mained steady at 6.6 per cent.

The economy generally, is pulling out of recession but a continued increase in unemployment has been widely predicted because an increase in jobs traditionally lags behind economic recovery. The Canadian Labor Congress predicts the jobless rate will rise to eight per cent in early 1976 before improving.

The unemployment rate in New Brunswick was 11.9 per cent, up from 10.7 in July. In Quebec the rate rose one-tenth of one per cent to 8.9 per cent.

The rate jumped nine-tenths of one per cent in Nova Scotia, to 7.9 per cent, and the same amount in Manitoba, where the August rate stood at 3.5 per cent.

On a seasonally-adjusted basis, the number of people holding jobs in August was 9,298,000, a drop of 18,000 from July. However the number of people in labor force dropped by only 6,000 to 10,034,000.

In an actual basis, 9,779,000 held jobs in August, a decline of 47,000 from July. One the same basis, the size of the labor force dropped by 77,000 to 10,402,000 in August.

'A Miracle They Survived'

Three adults, three children and a 20-year-old woman, missing on a flight from Rivers Inlet, B.C. to Vancouver, were rescued Monday after their plane crashed near Sechelt.

Picked up at the crash site, about 40 miles northwest of Vancouver, were pilot Henry Smeets, 38 and his children, Michael, 8, David, 7 and Lisa, 6, all of Haney; a 20-year-old niece; Hank Oudman and Wilf Gareau.

A Pacific Rescue Co-ordination Centre spokesman said the seven were picked up by helicopter and taken to Vancouver after two of the adults walked to a nearby logging camp and telephoned rescue officials.

The spokesman said he had no information on the reasons for the crash landing of the Cessna 180 but added, "It was a miracle they all survived."

All seven were taken to hospital and, with the exception of Oudman, later released. Oudman was being treated for a previous medical problem.

The spokesman said the plane crashed Sunday evening and the seven spent about 22 hours in the bush before being taken out.

The plane had last been reported earlier Sunday when it was refuelled at Sullivan Bay on North Broughton Island in Kingcombe Inlet. Rivers Inlet is about 240 miles northwest of Vancouver.

Oudman, 41, of Burnaby, said in hospital in New Westminster that he considered himself extremely fortunate to be alive.

He said that when the plane crashed he was trapped in the co-pilot's seat where fuel from a broken tank poured over his shoulders and back. Oudman is a paraplegic.

"I still feel a little shaken," he said. "It was quite a harrowing experience when you come spiralling down.

"I really feel fortunate. As we crashed, the wing on my side got all mangled up . . . before I could get out I was doused with fuel.

"It was quite a thing to get me out. I was afraid that the plane might explode."

Oudman was a fighter pilot for the Dutch air force during the 1950s, he said, and this was not his first crash, but "the most fiercesome one."

Bandits Elude Police

PARIS (AP) — Police searched today for two "young, calm and very decided" gunmen who changed cars twice during a high-speed chase through the streets of Paris and escaped with $1.35 million.

The gunmen were also encumbered at the start of their flight by three hostages but left them in the getaway cars they abandonned.

"We almost got them," Police Commissioner Robert Groussard said. "It was touch and go for a few moments there."

Armed with machine pistols and a sawed-off shotgun, the two men invaded a bank on the Left Bank about 11:30 a.m. Monday, took seven persons hostage and demanded six million francs. Following an afternoon of negotiations, police delivered the money and a white limousine to the door of the bank.

The gunmen abandoned the white car on the northern edge of the city, leaving one of the women behind, and continued with the other two women in a second car which police said had apparently been waiting for them.

That car, with the two women safely inside, was abandoned in south Paris and the men switched to a third car.

Meanwhile, in Milan, Italy, three armed men who tried to rob a bank surrendered to police and released 11 hostages they had held for more than seven hours Monday. The bandits had threatened to kill the hostages one by one unless given $320,000 and two getaway cars

While the surrender was being negotiated, five bandits escaped from another Milan bank with $1,600.

Ulster Protestants Rule Out Alliance

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (UPI) — Protestant political leaders have ruled out sharing power with the minority Roman Catholics, plunging Northern Ireland into a new political crisis.

Gunmen in a car fired a burst from a machine gun at Lynch's Bar in the predominantly Catholic Grosvenor Road area Monday night, seriously wounding two customers.

As the car sped away, the gunman fired at pedestrians walking along the road, wounding one man in the chest, police said.

The majority Protestant bloc in the 78-member constitutional convention said Monday there was "no question of partnership government with any politicans who aspire either in the long term or short term to a united Ireland."

This would rule out power-sharing with politicians of the mainly Catholic Social and Democratic Labor Party, whose long-term aim is to unite Northern Ireland with the Irish Republic.

The convention was to write a new constitution for Northern Ireland, but when Protestant hardliners won an overwhelming majority in elections last May, politicians saw little chance of success.

The British government retained the right to veto any constitution that lacked Catholic support.

The convention was scheduled to meet Thursday after a long summer recess during which the Protestants and Catholics met privately in an unsuccessful effort to overcome the impassé over power-sharing.

Good Advice from Beryl

Like the opposition parties in parliament, Beryl Plumptre can advise and criticize without responsibility since she has no power to effect change. But the chairperson of the federal Food Prices Review Board hits the nail on the head when she say the demands of unions involved in the supermarket dispute are far too high. Plumptre went even further. She added that the food industry's latest offer — rejected by the unions — is about one-third higher that what the board considers responsible under current economic conditions.

The unions turned down a food industry offer to increase wages by $52 per week in contracts covering less than one year. According to management, original union demands would give meatcutters an annual salary of more than $21,000, bakers close to $19,000 and clerk cashiers more than $16,000. When the bakers' and meatcutters' unions did not reply to a food industry ultimatum demanding three days notice of any picketing, 3,500 members of the Retail Clerks' Union were locked out effectively closing most of the lower mainland's supermarkets.

Plumptre may have been motivated to add her comments because any high settlement in the food industry is bound to be reflected in other provinces eventually. Yet her facts are hard to quarrel with. Insatiable union demands far beyond the cost of living, coupled with an isolated market freed from many competitive forces result in $41.50 worth of groceries in Toronto costing $47.50 in British Columbia. Too put all the blame on the current provincial government is unfair. This province's labor management woes are rooted in history. Both Social Credit and the NDP have vainly attempted to put an end to the futile, never ending strikes and lockouts which plague the province.

Yet the ultimate sufferers in the supermarket dispute, as in many other labor disputts, are the consumer and the producer. Produce can literally rot in the fields for lack of a market while consumers only a few miles away are forced to go to another country to buy food. When an impasse reaches this stage, especially in a commodity as necessary as food, the provincial government has to do more than go through the motions.

While the government should not be expected to solve every labor dispute in the province, the strike-lockout syndrome is out of hand in B.C. A confrontation is looming between labor and the provincial government. Because of ideology and respect for the collective bargaining process, the government has kept at arms length. Considering that the forest industry is almost completely shut down and the supermarket strike-lockout continues, to mention only two major disputes, the Barrett administration should take an active hand in effecting a settlement in these two disputes. Paralysis has a way of spreading in the face of lethargy until the organism gives up.

" . . . can't we let Norway, Sweden and Finland have a conflict? . . . I've never been to Scandinavia . . . "

Shallow Waters Run Turbulent

The provincial government's announcement that it is considering diverting about one-fifth of the Kootenay River flow into the Columbia River system, thereby reducing the power-generating capacity of the recently opened Libby Dam by 25 per cent, has raised hackles on both sides of the border. Most of the aroused ire, it is interesting to note, issues from the misinformed mouths of politicians.

U.S. co-ordinator for the Columbia River treaty Harold Kropitzer said the announcement didn't particularly excite him. In fact, the diversion was provided for in the original Columbia treaty. Dr. Hugh Keenleyside echoes those sentiments on this side of the border.

Yet there is U.S. senate majority leader Mike Mansfield saying the diversion would be a disaster for northwest states. Resources Minister Bob Williams said if B.C. did not examine its right to divert the waters, B.C. could lose the right. The minister changed his tune the next day, apparently after consulting the treaty. Now all we need is for opposition leader Bill Bennett to weigh in accusing Barrett of another anti-American ploy.

If the politicians would consult the treaty before getting hysterical they would temper their attacks. Article 13 states unequivocally that Canada cannot divert the Kootenay waters before 1984, although it is free to do so any time after that date. Not to take advantage of treaty provisions that will benefit B.C. would be stupid. The provincial government is only acting responsibly in announcing its intentions to consider the diversion. But politicians on both sides of the border should consult the facts before opening the verbal floodgates on a matter of international sensitivity.

RICHARD GWYN

Juneau: Bold and Byzantine

OTTAWA — Among the hawks and doves of Ottawa, Pierre Juneau has always been a solitary cat. Intense, driven, bold, a man with a mission equipped with an uncompromising, crystalline intellect. He is also an elitist, and autocrat and a ruthless byzantine operator in the political backrooms. Add to this an extraordinary physical presence, the sense of coiled strength that he radiates even in repose, and the former chairman of the Canadian Radio-Television Commission who's just been named minister of communications becomes beyond question one of the most intriguing and commanding personalities on the national political stage.

One phrase provides the essential measure of what Juneau is all about. "Either we have a country or we don't," he once said. "Let us decide."

As a politician, Juneau will have his difficulties. He has no experience in and no taste whatever for the sweaty arts of politics. While head of the CRTC, untouchable and all-knowing, he made enemies of scores of MPs, as many of them Liberals as opposition members.

Push to Extreme

More probably, Juneau will learn to play politics as well as he learned how to play English-Canada. He has a quality of discrimination that Health Minister Marc Lalonde, who has as much intellectual power, lacks.

It's impossible to imagine Juneau accepting free jet flights to Israel, as did Lalonde. Responsibility for the CBC, it is certain, will be transferred to Juneau from the secretary of state. And, perhaps also, responsibility for films.

The push to the extreme, in other words Canada, matters, so act as if it did — the 30-per-cent Canadian content rule for radio broadcasts, the licence to the third television network, Global, even though the market really wasn't ready for it. Canadian content for television commercials, priority for Canadian signals on cable-television systems when what the public actually wanted, everyone knew, was just more American signals.

Other than communications guru Marshall McLuhan, Juneau's intellectual sources are French, such as Catholic philosopher Teilhard de Chardin, and political scientist Jacques Ellul. The source of his nationalism is Quebec. Early in his term with the commission, Juneau almost was timid about the unknown country of English-Canada. He found it, after Quebec, too unpredictable, too democratic, too plain higgledypiggledy. Yet he hit the right notes and became the darling of English-Canadian nationalists.

Whatever the organizational shuffles,

PIERRE JUNEAU
. . . solitary cat Trudeau confidante

Juneau, by his experience and his strength of vision, will emerge in the cabinet as the dominant figure for cultural as well as for broadcasting and communications policies. As one sign in this direction, Juneau used his press conference to express concern about "the state of production (of films and broadcasting) in this country."

Indeed, for the past year Juneau's prime concern at the CRTC has been to develop policies to encourage film and television production-matters that normally are the responsibility of government departments rather than of a regulatory agency.

Despite all the strengths Juneau will bring to the cabinet, one aspect of his appointment is deeply disturbing. In pursuit of his quite legitimate goal of recruiting talent, Prime Minister Trudeau has so obliterated the distinctions, which are central to our parliamentary system, between civil service and political party that the two bodies have become a single instrument.

Juneau, a public servant in a highly sensitive position, has been turned overnight into a cabinet minister. Indeed, the distinctions between the two categories were treated so casually that Trudeau, early in August, gave Juneau 10 days to choose between the political post or a top civil service position as under-secretary of state.

Impregnable Complacency

At the same time, Juneau's predecessor as communications minister, Gerard Pelletier, has been appointed to the plum civil service post of ambassador in Paris. There he will succeed another ex-Liberal cabinet minister, Leo Cadieux.

Juneau, in fact, never was as politically independent as he seemed. He was a well-connected cat, and after-hours confidante of Lalonde, Pelletier and Trudeau.

The appearance of civil service independance is as important almost as its substance. No one outwardly understood this better than Juneau. Three years ago, he suspended without pay a CRTC official, Ann Booth, when she applied for leave of absence to contest a Liberal nomination.

Booth, mind you, was only a middle-rank employee. And she was seeking only a provincial Liberal nomination. No need to bend the rules — or to invent new ones — for such small stakes.

Juneau's qualifications to be a cabinet minister, and equally those of Pelletier to be an ambassador, are beyond question. But the country has paid a high price to get the right people in the right posts. And so, just possibly, will the Liberal government — though its complacency these days is impregnable.

JAMES RESTON

There's No Mideast Alternative

WASHINGTON — In the Middle East, Henry Kissinger has negotiated a period of peace at a fairly stiff price. Nothing has been settled, and congress is worried about the cost and dangers of putting American men and arms on the line, but the worst has been avoided or at least postponed, and Kissinger probably deserves more credit for the pause than he will get.

Mike Mansfield, the Democratic leader in the U.S. senate is uneasy about the whole deal. He feels that the accommodation between Israel and Egypt rests on promises of American men and money which congress knew nothing about and didn't approve in advance.

He likes Henry Kissinger and approves of his objectives, but thinks this is an odd way to conduct foreign policy and predicts a battle on Capitol Hill over Kissinger's tactics and promises.

Kissinger took a chance on all this. He knew he would run into opposition in Israel, Egypt and on Capitol Hill, but came to the conclusion that unless Washington tried to mediate in the struggle, there would be another war in the Middle East, and the cost and dangers for the United States would be much greater.

Untidy Accommodations

He is in the middle now, and will probably be blamed for whatever goes wrong in an uncertain and ambiguous compromise, but right or wrong, he is operating on what he believes to be a practical lesson of history.

For most of the progress toward peace in the last generation, as he sees it, has been made by a series of untidy accommodations between the major powers, which nobody liked but which they agreed to tolerate. Whenever there was a serious danger of confrontation between Moscow and Washington that might lead to atomic war, as in the Middle East, Kissinger the historian at Harvard, at the White House, or at the U.S. state department, has always been for compromise.

His argument is fairly clear. In the period between the two world wars, the statesmen of the major powers — if that's the right word for them — were much more heroic and determined to insist on their rights and principles, and as a result of their tactics peace lasted for only 20 years, before the Second World War almost destroyed western civilization. The big powers have avoided a major war for over thirty years since then.

Kissinger, whose family was a victim of this tragic civil war between Germany and the rest of the western world, is clearly against confrontations between the major nations now. He was dogmatic about Vietnam and often seems indifferent to the coming struggles in Latin America and the rest of the hungry world. But on the larger questions of the Soviet Union, China, or the Middle East, which may risk another world war, he is very cautious and plays for time.

HENRY KISSINGER

That is what he seems to have been doing in the Middle East. He has established a close personal relationship with President Anwar Sadat of Egypt, and seems to believe that Sadat, while he lasts, more than anyone in that part of the world, will make peace with Israel, and begin to think in larger terms about relieving the poverty and easing the hostility in that part of the world.

Kissinger may be right or wrong on this, but he has kept trying to prove his point, with the approval of U.S. President Gerald Ford, and has driven himself almost to the point of exhaustion, flying from one Middle Eastern capital to another.

It is a mad sort of diplomacy. The old traditionalists in the Quai d'Orsay in Paris and the Foreign Office in London watch his flying shuttle with astonishment, and rather resent his confident arrogance, but agree, almost reluctantly, that if he hadn't pressed Cairo and Jerusalem to compromise, they might very well have gone to war again.

Accordingly, congress, like the allies, resentful but grudgingly admiring of Kissinger's determination, will probably approve the interim Israeli-Egyptian settlement, not with as much money as the Israeli government wants, and not happy about putting American observers between the Israeli and Egyptian lines, but supportive nonetheless.

Constitutional Crisis

For given the predicament in the Middle East, and Kissinger's long and arduous efforts at conciliation, they have no practical alternative. When he agrees that he has settled nothing, but merely bought time and asks them if they have a better plan, if they want to risk war in the Middle East and confrontation with the Soviets, they obviously have no answer.

They can say he has not kept them informed, and has negotiated an agreement which depends on American promises he had no authority to suggest, even that he has trapped them into voting funds and sending American observers between the lines, they will bridle and argue, but in the end they will probably go along.

For if congress were to repudiate the U.S. administration now on the Middle East after defying it on military aid to Turkey and trade relationships with the Soviet Union, there would be a constitutional crises in Washington over the conduct of American foreign policy, and the Democrats are not prepared for that at the beginning of a struggle for the presidency in 1976.

Bird Feathers

A writer objects to publishing certain trivia. The editor judged correctly because the trivia brought a good response, which is what reader interest is all about.

Imagine! Over a quarter million dolphins and porpoises killed each year and processed for cat food and their liver dainties. A mammal reputed to have the largest brain capacity and intelligence next to man sacrificed for dear stupid selfish, pampered pussies. Or should we can the hummingbirds before using them as kitty din-din?

The cat is a supreme being. By law it can roam at will unmolested and woe betide the fool who incurs the wrath of their loving servant, man, who does not have the same right.

Hawks kill ducks, coyotes kill rabbits, humans kill humans, but none is the fault of the mere observer.

The cat has the law on his side. A couple of well-fed cats can kill 500 birds a year for sport. Which birds can then not eat the bugs and grubs in our garden, so we must then use sprays that are ingested in minute cumulative quantities to harm and eventually destroy us—leaving Mr. Pussycat the surviving lord of the domain.

People who live in apartments and spend time watching Yates Street theatre lineups seldom see hummingbirds or other wild life phenomena.—V. R. Cragg, 799 Byng Street.

Thick smoke and dense fogs severely hampered the whale-hunting season, reports Captain John Christian of the whaler White, which has returned to port here after a two months' hunting expedition with results which were entirely unsatisfactory. Early in July the White pulled out from Victoria and proceeded direct to work in conjunction with the Naden Harbor whaling station, but for almost the entire season thick smoke, caused by the bush fires all along the coast, proved a great menace to the whale hunters.

Strife in the Fields

By WINTHROP GRIFFITH

SALINAS, Calif. — Though nobody in California is as euphoric as a few months ago and predicting "peace in the fields", a major advance has occurred in the decade-long effort to give some rights to the farm workers.

The state's farm-labor law that went into effect last month assures the workers, for the first time, full collective bargaining rights and the power of a secret ballot to choose which union, if any, should represent them. The law also establishes a more orderly procedure for resolution of conflicts among the growers.

Even after the elections are held in coming weeks, however, labor tensions will continue. Cesar Chavez says he believes that, whether or not his United Farm Workers Union wins most of the elections, the union will have to keep up with boycotts and strikes against growers to achieve its contract demands.

Both Chavez's union and the rival Teamsters union are publicly predicting victory in the elections, but privately their leaders are nervous about the outcome. The United Farm Workers now holds a dozen contracts, representing less than 5,000 workers; the Teamsters hold nearly 40 contracts representing about 55,000 workers.

The choice for many of the workers will not be easy. It will depend mainly on the special circumstances on the particular farm on which they happen to be working at the time an election is held there.

The wages, benefits and services offered by each union are similar. Workers average about $3 an hour. That's a big increase over the wage 10 years ago, before Chavez began organizing the workers, but, with seasonal work limitations, the annual income of most farm-worker families is still below the federally defined "poverty level".

Farm workers once suffered or profited in other ways at the whim of individual growers. Today, contracts of both unions include grievance procedures, some job security, medical care and pension privileges. The unions' staffs also assist members with immigration problems and applications for unemployment and food stamp benefits.

Chavez remains a hero among most of the farm workers in the Southwest because of his early efforts in their behalf. He and most of the United Farm Workers leaders and organizers are Mexican-American, and their meetings are conducted in Spanish. The great majority of California's farm workers are Mexican-American or Filipino.

The Teamsters Union claims organizational efficiency and power behind it to enforce the union's contracts. Many of the workers don't like Chavez's militancy, preferring the more solid approach of the Teamsters and the friendly relations between Teamster officials and the growers.

The Teamsters, however, have had some organizational setbacks after winning away most of Chavez's contracts since the summer of 1973. In mid-1974, the Teamsters announced he charter for union local 1973, the appointment of a Mexican-American to head it and the establishment of the local's headquarters in a building surrounded by lettuce fields just south of Salinas.

A few months ago, the Teamsters fired the local chief, David Castro, absorbed the local's officers into other locals around the state and shifted the headquarters out of Salinas and back to the Teamsters Western Conference offices in the San Francisco suburb of Burlingame.

The field workers — toiling in the early-morning cold and the hot afternoon sun, their feet moving sideways through history, arguments and contract provisions which favor one union over the other.

William Farley, who supervises the foremen and field workers for a corporate grower based in Salinas, says the workers feel an "esprit" for Mr. Chavez that they don't feel for the Anglo-dominated Teamsters, but they "respect" the power of the Teamsters. He also speculates: "The workers won't want to rock the boat to jeopardize their jobs and wages. Before the elections, they'll be pushed hard by both sides and there may be some rough stuff, but they'll make up their own minds."

California's new farm-labor law is likely to set the pattern for other states with a big agricultural industry and large numbers of farm workers. But the benefits of California's law are not likely to spread very quickly to the majority of field workers in the nation.

The Chavez union and the Teamsters represent, at best, only about one-fourth of California's 230,000 farm workers. Altogether in the United States — from California to New Jersey, from Florida to Maine — there are almost 3 million salaried farm workers. It is likely to be a long time before most of them rise above the poverty level.

Portugal's Revolutionary Doctor of Violence

By BERNARD D. NOSSITER

LISBON — Of all the exotic flowers blooming in Portugal's revolution, the rarest is Isabel do Carmo, a soft-spoken doctor who runs with her husband the biggest private army on the far-out left.

The local La Pasionara (revolutionary heroine of the Spanish Civil War) is keeping her rifles, machine guns and mortars primed for foreign enemies — "Americans and NATO," she says with an apologetic smile.

Isabel, as everyone in the movement calls her, is a leader of the Revolutionary party of the Proletariat - Revolutionary Brigades.

Linked to Power

What distinguishes the party from the crowd of other extreme-left parties here is its conviction that violence is necessary to achieve the "socialist revolution." The Revolutionary Brigades already have had a profound effect on the thinking of the officers in COPCON, the military security forces.

"Violence is linked to power," Isabel said in the small hours of a recent morning at the poster-covered headquarters of her party. "Power is always linked to violence," she went on and cited Marx in support. She meant that workers could not expect to take power without using force.

But has Portugal not made its revolution, and could not the Brigades now give up their weapons?

"We keep our army solid to resist fascism," Isabel replied. "It gives us confidence that we can resist fascism. We are very prepared."

Just how prepared, she said with a smile, is a "secret." But she claimed the Brigades had 40 "military units" in "forts" all over the country, and that they were equipped with "everything an army has except tanks."

There is "great danger of an American intervention" here, she insisted, particularly if Portugal's divided army is propelled into a civil war. The U.S., she said, would come in "with a very democratic reason," supporting the three-quarters of the country that had voted against the left.

Isabel and her husband, Carlos Antunes, are already veterans of three years of guerrilla war. They organized the Brigades in 1971 and conducted sabotage operations against the old regime of Premier Marcello Caetano.

Then as now, Isabel herself was busier with political theory than planting bombs, although women carry rifles alongside men in the Brigades. She said that she sometimes prepared the materials for the attacks on military installations and the plants of foreign firms.

A compact woman of 34, with luminous brown eyes and black hair pulled back in a severe bun that emphasizes her high cheekbones, Isabel looks as if she would be more at home in the clinic where she still works part-time than in the grimy, party headquarters littered with cigarette butts. In fact, she has been a political activist since she was 15.

Communists 'Timid'

Isabel grew up in Barreiro, "an industrial place with a Communist tradition." Her father was an office worker, "a petty bourgeois," she said.

At 18, she entered Lisbon University and joined the then illegal Communist party. Like the other university - trained revolutionaries here, she probably read the forbidden Marxist classics in French, a language she speaks fluently.

But after 14 years she and her husband broke with the Communists. The party, they thought, was too timid, too "bourgeois."

Now Isabel thinks that the Communists are enlisted "in an old party." For them the party is like the Social Democrats at the start of the century. It is destined to die."

The leader of the Portuguese Communists, Alvaro Cunhal, "entered into the government" soon after the 1974 revolution "to conciliate the classes" and fashioned a "bourgeois policy that represses workers," Isabel said. That last is her description of an effort to hold down wages and cool off Portugal's red-hot inflation.

Of all the bizarre features in the turmoil here, perhaps the least likely is the link between the COPCON security forces, set up to maintain internal order, and Isabel's Brigades.

At first, Isabel explained, she was suspicious of the officers, but then she saw COPCON support worker demonstrations, oppose those of the "Social Democrats" and help citizens take over empty houses like the one occupied by the Brigades just off the once fashionable Marques de Pombal Plaza.

To the horror of the Socialist party here, COPCON even freed eight Brigade members who had been strolling up and down a beach with pistols, rifles and machine guns.

Bring in Americans

The marriage was sealed in the current political crisis after nine moderate officers issued a manifesto denouncing the growing strength of the Communists in government, urging a slowdown in the face of nationalization and calling for firm links to the Common Market and the West.

Isabel said she feared this manifesto would divide the military — "it is not a parliament, but an army" — and touch off the civil war that she is convinced will bring in American troops.

So she, Carlos Antunes and another Brigades leader sat down with six COPCON captains and majors to compose a counter-manifesto.

It too criticized "Communist penetration" but urged a faster pace for the revolution, notably the handover of power to popularly elected worker and peasant assemblies.

This left the government of Premier Vasco Goncalves under attack from both right — the nine "moderates" — and left, the COPCON-Brigades alliance. An effort was made to produce a joint document, something Isabel opposed. Had it succeeded, Goncalves would have fallen.

But the circle could not be squared, so Goncalves is still in office, at least for the moment.

Isabel is emphatically not a supporter of the Goncalves regime. "We want a revolutionary government to support a revolutionary program," she said. "We accept Vasco until there is really a socialist alternative."

Would she prefer a Communist regime led by Cunhal to a "moderate" government led by Ernesto Melo Antunes, the leader of the nine officers?

"One does not choose between the cholera and the plague," the doctor replied.

What she calls "bourgeois democracy" is impossible in Portugal, Isabel contends, because the country's economy is so heavily dependent on foreign firms seeking cheap labor.

In her new order — and Cuba comes closer to it than any other state — she claims civil rights and liberties will be respected.

The workers, she says, "will not tolerate an authoritarian revolution, an authoritarian regime."

She has little time now for her 3-year-old daughter and was still holding forth at her party headquarters at 2:30 in the morning when interviewed.

There, under the Brigades symbol of a clenched fist holding a tommy gun over a crossed hoe and monkey wrench, the doctor was prescribing for a body politic that looked badly in need of rest.

The Literary Lion List

russell baker

After all the political protests about President Ford's refusal to receive Alexander Solzhenitzyn at the White House, the president first tried to recoup by telling the famous novelist to drop in anytime and then, when Solzhenitzyn refused, by persuading some other famous writers to visit.

In this way, the president's image molders reasoned, they would at least re-establish his reputation in the artistic world as a man hospitable to literature. When they sent for the White House file on acceptable authors, however, they ran into trouble. There was scarcely a writer on file whose attendance at the White House could be tolerated.

Henry James was black-listed as "political dynamite." "A voice of the Eastern intellectual establishment," the file said, "James frequents mostly British-type country houses, worries constantly about etiquette and speaks in endless compound-complex sentences with intricate interior punctuation. Identification with James would kill us in middle America."

Ford wanted Marcel Proust, but Proust's dossier wrote him off as "socially impossible," pointing out that he would not meet the president outside a cork-lined room, nor before 2 o'clock in the morning, and that he would then speak one sentence which would last for seven hours and 45 minutes.

This would not deal with the approaching football season, the CIA profile predicted, but with the changing effects of shifting sunlight on the color of hawthorns, a subject on which the president was ill-equipped to feign some eight hours of intense interest.

Charles Dickens was out of the question. "This notorious propagandist for welfare-type people is openly opposed to child labor, urban slum conditions and debtors' prisons," the Dickens file stated. A memo from the Republican National Committee noted that the president would risk offending his own economists if he allowed himself to be identified with the famous agitator for these advanced 19th-century ideas.

Mark Twain was ruled out. He had written dialogue for black characters in illiterate dialect and was, therefore, almost certain to cost the president liberal votes for entertaining a racist.

"Leo Tolstoy?" the president suggested. Impossible, the FBI reported. The FBI had been bugging Tolstoy and its tapes were such hot stuff that they had been amusing stag dinners after hours in the White House for years. The FBI was surprised Ford had never heard them.

In any case, Tolstoy had left his wife in old age and the tapes of his antics with peasant girls behind the wheat sheaves were X-rated. Entertaining a man like Tolstoy would be only slightly less damaging than being seen in a Maryland roadhouse with Linda Lovelace.

"I've always liked Ernest Hemingway," said the president.

"Don't breathe that name!" cautioned the Literary Political Police. And for good reason. The files showed Hemingway was a passionate devotee of bullfighting. It would have cost the president the vote of the entire kindness-to-beasts bloc, which is approximately 97 per cent of the electorate.

Someone suggested Norman Mailer. It was seriously considered. The dossier showed there was a 50-50 chance Mailer would challenge the president to a boxing match in the East Room. Although the odds favored the president's winning by a TKO within three rounds, which would be good for his image, there would be an angry uproar from the Daughters of the American Revolution, which might cost him the corsaged-bosom vote.

Balzac was rejected out of hand. The entire electorate believed he wrote dirty books, and since nobody had ever read one, it would be impossible to persuade them otherwise.

That left William Faulkner and F. Scott Fitzgerald, who both drank; Robert Frost, who was a Kennedy man, and Thornton Wilder, who was tired of being the only writer respectable enough to be invited to the White House and might reject the invitation.

"There must be one writer we can have in," said the president.

"There is," said Henry Kissinger. "Me."

The president apologized. He had forgotten that Kissinger was also a writer. "I'll have Henry," the president told Mrs. Ford. "He can do everything."

And the president and Kissinger had a fruitful exchange of prose.

Surrey Backs Mayor's Welfare-Work Program

SURREY (CP) — Council Monday night unanimously endorsed Mayor Bill Vander Zalm's alternative welfare plan which features a make-work program.

Council approved the mayor's proposals after scant discussion and recommended them to the UBCM (Union of British Columbia Municipalities) and the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities.

In addition to a provincial-municipal job opportunity program, Vander Zalm's plan called for:

—The provincial governments assumption of all welfare costs,

—A standard province-wide welfare system with computer checks and more home visits to determine eligibility.

VANCOUVER (CP) — Leaders of British Columbia's Italian community announced Monday the formation of an organization to promote the interests of the community in business and professional affairs and provide them with an official voice.

The Italian-Canadian Business and Professionals' Association, chartered by both the federal and provincial governments, now is recruiting members from among the estimated 60,000 Italian-Canadians in B.C. and the additional 40,000 persons linked to the community by family ties or business interests.

Similar organizations exist in Quebec and Ontario but this is believed to be the first in this province.

The group plans to place particular emphasis on assisting new arrivals here from Italy or other parts of Canada and will consider establishing financial aid programs and courses.

VANDERHOOF (CP) — Roger Paul Quaw, 19, of Stoney Creek died in a single-car accident about 14 miles west of here Saturday on Highway 16.

Police said he was a passenger in a car driven by Ratheal Quaw, 21, that left the highway.

Mounties Criticized For Firing Into Case

NORTH VANCOUVER (CP) — The commanding officer of the RCMP detachment here criticized Monday the actions of two constables who last month fired seven bullets into a salesman's suitcase to test for a bomb.

"I'm not very pleased with the action they took," Inspector Norman Fuchs said in an interview. "But they did it and we're stuck with it."

But Fuchs would not indicate if the two constables — who he declined to identify — will be reprimanded or disciplined.

Both have been on the force for two years, he said.

"But we'll make sure the two never handle a bomb investigation again in that manner," said Fuchs, adding he will recommend that the damaged suitcase and contents — worth about $100 — be paid for.

The bullet-riddled suitcase belonged to Charlie Daley, a 75-year-old door-to-door salesman of tea towels, aprons, oven mitts and other household items.

Daley left his wares at a car rental firm while he made a delivery, but staff at the firm called the RCMP, fearing the suitcase was a bomb. Daley later recovered it at RCMP headquarters — all shot up.

95% BACK AT ICBC

VANCOUVER (CP) — about 95 per cent of the Insurance Corp. of British Columbia's 1,800 employees have returned to work so far following their 100-day strike, ICBC spokesman Jerry Beckerman said Monday.

He said the final figure won't be known until the end of the week, but it looks like the number of workers not returning will be less than five per cent.

Union spokesman Fred Trotter said in August that as many as 300 or 16 per cent, of the staff had decided to take other permanent jobs, rather than return to the provincial government-owned insurance company.

The ICBC employees went back on the job Sept. 2 after accepting a 39.5 per cent wage increase over 28 months.

Beckerman said more than 1,500 applications have already been received in Vancouver from people looking for work as the employees who found other work are replaced.

Damage Award Quashed

VANCOUVER (CP) — A $25,000 damage award was quashed Monday when two B.C. Court of Appeal judges said they felt that a 1973 jury which gave the award to the widow of a train accident victim based its verdict on sympathy rather than fact.

Mr. Justice A. B. Robertson and Mr. Justice M. M. McFarlane made their comments in quashing the award against CP Rail and two train men. It had gone to Delores Sam, widow of Elmer Calvin Sam, who died when he was struck by a CP Rail frieght train about 3 a.m. May 4, 1972, on a railway spur line which goes through an Indian reserve near Nanaimo.

Mr. Justice A. E. Branca, the third judge in the panel, upheld the jury's finding.

In the supreme court suit against CP Rail and the train men brought for the widow and her daughter, Shaon, the jury held that Mr. Sam was 60 per cent to blame for his own accident and the railway and two members of the train crew were 40 per cent to blame. The widow's 40 per cent of the total damages assessed in the award amounted to $25,000.

The supreme court jury, and later the appeal court, was told that Mr. Sam's body was found lying near the track after the train had passed by and that tests showed later that the man had a blood-alcohol reading of .20 which indicated impairment.

The jury had ruled hat CP Rail and the two members of the train crew were negligent for not maintaining a proper lookout.

Mr. Justice Robertson and Mr. Justice McFarlane moved to allow the appeal of the railway and its train men on their finding that it had not been shown that the train men, in the circumstances of the mishap, had failed to maintain a proper lookout.

Burning Rectal Itch Relieved In Minutes

One of the most common afflictions is a condition known as "Itching Piles." It is most embarrassing for the sufferer during the day and especially aggravating at night.

If you want satisfactory relief—here's good news. A renowned research laboratory has found a unique healing substance with the ability to promptly relieve the burning itch and pain. It actually shrinks hemorrhoids. This substance has been shown to produce a most effective rate of healing. Its germ-killing properties also help prevent infection.

In one hemorrhoid case after another "very striking improvement" was reported. This improvement was maintained in cases where clinical observations were continued over a period of many months. Furthermore, these tests and observations were made on patients with a wide variety of hemorrhoidal conditions.

All this was accomplished by a healing substance (Bio-Dyne)—developed by a world-renowned research institution. This substance is now obtainable in ointment or suppository form known as Preparation H. Teacher Strikes Cutting Classes For 2.2 Million U.S. Children

Times News Services

New York City's 60,000 teachers went on strike against the largest public school system in the U.S. today, forcing up to 1.1 million children to do without normal classroom instruction.

The New York strike, a continuing Chicago walkout and smaller strikes in nine other states left more than two million students to enjoy extended vacations or sit in cold or half-empty classrooms.

San Francisco also faces a strike threat.

A spokesman for the 80,000-member United Federation of Teachers said the union overwhelmingly approved the walkout by a 22,870-to-900 margin in a secret ballot conducted Monday night at Madison Square Garden.

Dr. Robert Christen, head of the board of education's negotiating team, charged the UFT with "using an illegal action to attempt to change conditions that have been caused by a budgetary crisis."

The board has asked the city to seek an injunction against the walkout under the law which bans strikes by public employees.

However, schools were ordered open for all but 129,000 students who are bused to school.

The board said pupils who walk, use public transportation or private cars are expected to show up.

"Salary is not the issue," Shanker told the teachers. "The issue is conditions in the schools. They are a danger both to the babies and the babysitters and that we will not go for."

If You're Pregnant . . . Don't Smoke!

Times News Services

BALTIMORE — Pregnant women who smoke may be depriving fetuses of oxygen critical to proper growth and development, say two researchers at John Hopkins University.

Scientists have known that women who smoke cigarettes tend to give birth to undersized and sometimes dangerously delicate babies, but the cause has remained a mystery.

Based on more than a year of experiments with sheep, Drs. Gail Gurtner and Barry Burns say that harmful carbon monoxide from cigarette smoking can displace oxygen moving from the mother's bloodstream, through the placenta, and into the fetus.

Gurtner said the research shows that the placenta contains molecules, similar to blood hemoglobin, that speed movement of oxygen from mother to fetus. He described the process as similar to a "bucket brigade".

Before The Judge

Two large fines for simple possession of marijuana were handed down Monday in provincial court.

Earl Joseph Lampman, 34, of 1190 May, was fined $600 in family court by Judge Fred Green. Lampman pleaded guilty Aug. 14 to possession of the drug police found in his home Aug. 3.

He's had four narcotics convictions, Prosecutor Mike O'Connor said.

Wayne Roland Robinson was fined $200 for the offence in Judge Edmond St. Jorre's court — more than twice the usual fine.

Robinson, 20, of 918 Gorge, was picked up by police in the parking lot of the Colony Motor Inn Sept. 3 where he was sitting with friends in a vehicle. He has a previous narcotics conviction and other offences.

Paul Jowett, no fixed address, pleaded guilty to obtaining food and lodging by fraud after he stayed at the hotel Aug. 17 to Sept. 4. He paid most of the bill in advance.

Prosecutor Nick Lang said Jowett had a record dating from 1971.

Russell Irving Bannister, 26, of 3929 Glanford, pleaded guilty to false pretences after cashing a worthless cheque for $125 at the gas station where he worked Aug. 12.

"At the time I figured I needed some money," he told Judge St. Jorre.

He was sentenced to two months in jail and must compensate Carey Home Service, 3896 Carey Rd.

Prosecutor Nick Lang told the court Bannister was on probation for another offence when the incident occurred.

★ ★ ★

Clifford Eugene George, 19, of Tzouhalem, was fined $100 when he pleaded guilty to violating his judicial interim release.

He failed to report to his probation officer three times between his release May 12 on a charge and dismissal of the case June 15.

"It's a matter of trust. You turn these people loose and the least they can do is show up," said Judge St. Jorre.

"People are tearing loose. We can't have this sort of thing."

Three firms were fined for failing to file 1973 income tax returns, and each faced two counts for which minimum $25 per count fines were levied by St. Jorre.

Great West Dry Wall, 4126 Wilkinson; D. G. Butler Developments Ltd., 4379 Shelbourne; and Bermuda Holdings Ltd., no longer in operation, all pleaded guilty.

Richard Charles Gauthier, 22, of 6937 West Coast Rd., Sooke, was found guilty in Judge D. R. Campbel's court of driving with a blood alcohol level exceeding .08.

He was fined $300 and put on six months' probation.

$1B Boost Urged For Mail

WASHINGTON (WP)—U.S. Postmaster-General Benjamin Bailer asked Congress Monday for additional Postal Service subsidies of nearly $1 billion over each of the next two or three years.

Bailar told the National Postal Forum that a doubling of the current $920 million annual "public service payment" was necesary to help the service meet deficit that will total $2.5 billion by he end of the year.

"Our very serious financial situation is caused mainly by the interaction of rapid inflation and time-consuming ratemaking," he said.

"We don't view the additional payment as being permanent. We see it as a bridge from an inflation-wracked, deficit-ridden postal service to a financially solvent institution."

★ New York Saved To Yule

Times News Services

ALBANY — The New York legislature today approved a $2.3 billion plan to keep New York City from defaulting on its debts until nearly Christmas.

The loan legislation came after more than 19 straight hours of negotiations and debate and also imposes strict state controls on the city's budget.

It takes away much of Mayor Abraham Beane's authority and creates a new board controlled by state officials to impose what amounts to a condition of receivership on the city's budget process.

The board will have broad powers to approve the city budget and prevent the city from spending more than it is taking in. It will collect city revenues and turn them over for spending it has approved in advance.

The wages of city employees will be frozen, growth in city spending will be controlled and the city will be required to pay off its debt under a firm schedule.

Opponents of the bill warned that its heavy commitment of state cash threatened to wreck the state treasury if default occurred in December.

Couple Shot

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — A 14-year-old former patient of the New Hampshire state mental hospital fatally shot herself and her 17-year-old boyfriend in a ward of the hospital Monday, authorities said. No motive for the shootings was given.

Why would a $35,000 sales manager want to save a couple of bucks on a car rental?

The more you know about whisky, The better for OFC 8-Year Old.

In between 2 and 12 years, at one point in aging, like everything else in life, Canadian whisky reaches "The Prime of Life": golden, mellow, smooth and full bodied.

In our opinion, 8 years old is "Prime."

That's why OFC 8-Year Old is 8 years old. And only 8 years old.

You can drink younger whisky or older whisky but you can't drink finer whisky than OFC 8-Year Old.

Canada Causing Slump?

The Canadian Press

Some analysts believe that the Toronto stock market's recent behavior indicates investors are losing confidence in Canada's ability to solve its economic problems.

"A few months ago, it was thought that a major economic recovery would be well under way by Labor Day," said Harry Nerlich, director of research for Bongard, Leslie and Co. Ltd., Toronto. "Now it looks as though it won't happen until sometime in 1976."

The shift in consensus toward a slower strengthening of the economy seems to be reflected in the stock market's performance in the last few weeks.

From the beginning of the year until July 15, the TSE industrial index rose 37.09 points, or more than 23 per cent. In the last eight weeks, the index fell 10.75 with other major market indicators recording equally sharp losses.

The reasons given most frequently by analysts for the apparent loss of investor confidence in the economy include:

—Rising interest rates are boosting the cost of living and threaten to delay an economic recovery. The higher rates are also luring investors away from the stock market and into fixed-income areas such as bonds.

—Increases in consumer prices as shown by the 1.4-per-cent rise in the consumer price index in July. There are fears that recent wheat sales to the Soviet Union will lead to even higher food prices next year.

—Unemployment remains at its highest level in 14 years.

—Housing starts are forecast to be down about 15 per cent this year. The funds allocated to housing programs by the June 23 federal budget were dismissed by the housing industry as insignificant.

—Wage settlements being won by labor unions are, in many instances, outpacing the inflation rate. Several of these increases are expected to be passed on to the public in the form of higher prices.

—Increased costs and weaker markets are cutting into corporate profits.

Many analysts say the recent stock market decline can be considered a technical correction following a six-month period of uninterrupted advances. They say the market will have to weaken even further before indicating that investors have abandoned hope for an economic recovery.

The sharply lower volume of daily trading, which accompanied the downard trend, shows that "there is just as much lack of interest as selling pressure," said Mr. Nerlich. "People haven't started to panic — they have just become more cautious."

Andre Lemire, director of the research department for Levesque, Beaubien Inc. of Montreal, says the market remains vulnerable at its current level and predicts that prices will drop another five to 10 per cent before resuming the upward trend.

"Since the first of the year the market has moved up fast and sharply. It's normal to expect investors to become cautious following a rise like that."

Lemire said more active trading is needed to reverse the trend, which means investors must be given positive indications that the economy is improving.

Port Boom Forecast By Andras

THUNDER BAY (CP) — Ottawa could spend as much as $1.2 billion over the next 15 years to expand facilities at major Canadian ports to meet an increase in shipping, Manpower Minister Robert Andras said Monday.

To finance the increase "it's likely that transportation rates will have to be increased," Andras said.

$100 million of the total expenditure could go towards improving Arctic ports for handling mineral resources, he added.

Ginnell Keeping Sharp Eye on Goaltenders

By JIM CRERAR
Times Staff

Victoria Cougars opened training camp Monday with 90 hands on deck at Juan de Fuca Arena, but you can be sure that one area owner-coach Pat Ginnell will watch closely is goal.

What happened to the Cougars in last spring's Western Canada Hockey League playoff series against New Westminster Bruins has been haunting Ginnell all summer.

The way he sees it, the Bruins "stole" the series because of goaltending. There's no denying Gord Laxton who signed Monday with Pittsburgh Penguins, played a whale of a series, but Ginnell is of the opinion that had Gerry Simpson been healthy enough to tend goal for Cougars, the outcome would have been reversed.

Simpson, who moved up from Nanaimo Clippers of the B.C. Junior League, missed the series with torn ligaments and Cougars ended up in the Memorial Cup discard pile.

Simpson is back and he's been tabbed as an inside-tracker for netminding duties, along with Nanaimo graduate Danny Rogers and Steve Amiss, a Quesnel minor hockey product who was voted the top goalie in last year's national midget final.

In the long run, however, a goalie is only as good as the defence in front of him. There are two kinds of defencemen — rushers and checkers — and Ginnell is looking to tighten up the backchecking this year.

"I'm looking for another good defensive defenceman," he said following Monday afternoon's skating and scrimmage session. "We have two good rushers in Tim Williams and Gordie Roberts and we've got a good backup man in Lorry Gloeckner."

Gloeckner, a backchecking specialist, impressed Monday. He showed up in peak condition after a summer of Junior "A" lacrosse with Victoria McDonalds. In fact, he weighed in at 190, five pounds less than his playing weight last spring.

Ginnell has his eye on a two more defence candidates with backchecking ability. One is Ken Bueckert, 17-year-old brother of former Cougar goalie Glen Bueckert. He's up from the Clippers. The other is also a Nanaimo product, 16-year-old Leroy Heck.

LINE RUSHES — Perry Schnarr, a 17-year-old forward who scored 64 goals and 50 assists with Kelowna of the B.C. Junior League last season, was a no-show Monday. "The last I heard, he's gone back to Kelowna," said Ginnell, who was hoping to have him in camp . . .

Ginnell had newcomer Jeff McDill, acquired last week from Flin Flon, hooked up on left wing with centre Jim Gustafson in Monday's scrimmages. Another unit consisted of holdover Al Hill at centre, Danny Lucas at right wing and Kurt Fraser on the left side . . . Defenceman Gordie Roberts is still growing, it seems. He reported 10 pounds heavier than last year, weighing in at 195 . . . Biggest player in camp is defenceman Dave Beardsworth from Innisfail, Alta. He's 6'3" and weighs 210 . . . Peter Morris graduated from Cougars last spring but his younger brother, David, is in camp.

There's a California hockey player in camp, too. He's 19-year-old right-winger Brian Simpson from the Los Angeles area. Ginnell saw him at recent hockey school in Penticton . . . There was some heavy hitting in Monday's morning workout but the afternoon session was mostly skating and scrimmaging. Similar sessions continue at Juan de Fuca through Friday with drills at 10 a.m. and 12 noon, lasting until 2 p.m.

Fishing: My Friends, Those Killer Whales

NOTES AND LIKE THAT: A few years ago while out fishing with fellow staffer Pete Medwid, we ran into a pod, or maybe two, of killer whales, which isn't unusual in these parts; at the time the question arose: was this a dangerous situation in which to be? Because you can imagine what the reaction might be if two visitors, from say the prairies, happened to be off Race Rocks and had the same experience.

At any rate I phoned the late Dr. Clifford Carl, who was the provincial museum curator at that time, and he quickly put my mind at ease.

He explained then that the killer whale was really a friendly type, its name actually was a misnomer, there never had been an authenticated case on record of a killer whale attacking a boat, or humans, and there was little possibility either of a whale accidentally tipping a boat as it had a built-in radar system second to none. And, if that was the only worry, to go right on fishing and let the whale make corrections in its course, which it would do.

And thus, that has been the rule lo, these many moons since; and in that time your agent has come to admire these striking mammals of the deep, more and more.

This is so, even if they often ruin the fishing for a time; because after all, why would they be there if there weren't any fish around?

★ ★ ★

For example, twice at Rivers Inlet my arrival has been simultaneous with that of the killer whales and, on each occasion the mighty spring salmon, lurking in those murky waters, appeared to have been spooked for at least two days after the whales' visit; and results were very poor indeed.

Last week off Beechey Head, it was a similar story. Well, almost.

The weather was fine and the catch prospects, judging from previous results, good; when suddenly the familiar sight of that distinctive curved fin loomed on the horizon, to be followed by another, then about six more, then four and finally about 22 in all.

Every sports fisherman from that area and others on the Island knows the pattern well. This time, however, there was a difference, however slight, that attracted attention. It was one of aesthetics, if you like, nature being at its spectacular best.

For one of the larger whales was either more frisky or more accomplished than his playmates; it was coming clear out of the water almost every time it surfaced, then going into the equivalent of a half-roll and finally slapping the water with its tail when it landed, to repeat the performance about every 10 seconds later.

By the meticulous use of simple mathematics, it was determined that this frivolous whale, provided it kept on schedule, should pass by our boat at the same moment it would perform its half-roll trick and, having a camera aboard, wouldn't that make a great picture?

And thus, with camera at the ready, action stations were manned. Then came the hitch. The playful one didn't appear on schedule for whatever reason. But his pals did. And by design or otherwise, their arrival might have been even more spectacular. It certainly was more surprising. And if you've ever been looking for a whale from one side of a boat with an eye glued to a camera and suddenly their is the sound of a mighty "whoosh" directly in arrears, and less than 20 feet away, believe it, well . . . you get the idea!

And not only one, but two whales surfaced, directly alongside. The key word is "directly". They then ducked under the starboard rod, their markings clearly visible under the water and, as a parting gesture, scraped the line as they continued on their merry way.

If the fishing didn't improve after their visit, that was probably to be expected. Still, it is rather comforting to know that killer whales are indeed friendly even if sometimes they have an odd way of showing it.

The picture? Are you kiddin'? There were other things to do.

Burrards Will Present Italian Roadrunner Hour

VANCOUVER (CP) — Vancouver Burrards plan to make good use of the Italian Roadrunners when they open the Mann Cup lacrosse championships tonight against Brampton Excelsiors.

The Italian Roadrunners are three players—Rico Bellusci, Ray Durante and Joe Marello— picked up from Richmond Roadrunners of the Western Canada Junior Lacrosse League.

Vancouver coach Ross McDonald made extensive use of Bellusci when the Burrards defeated Victoria Shamrocks 4-1 in the finals of the Western Lacrosse Association.

Bellusci played in the final two games of the best-of-seven series, and scored eight goals and added four assists. Five of the goals came in the last game of the series.

The three juniors have an old team-mate already playing with the Burrards. Ron Pinder scored 64 goals this year in his rookie season in senior competition.

McDonald, who performed in 16 Mann Cup games himself as a player, looks for the Burrards to redeem themselves for their 1973 loss to Peterborough in the Mann Cup, which was a sudden-death game. This series is a best-of-three series, with the second game Thursday and the third, if necessay, Friday. All games will be played here.

"The players have long memories," McDonald said Monday, "and the club wants to win the Mann Cup for the Vancouver fans."

Seven members of the Burrards have played for the Canadian senior championship before, led by powerful defenceman Bob Salt.

Te 6-foot, 210-pound Salt has played in four previous Mann Cup series. He was named the most valuable player of the WLA playoffs.

Goaltender Don Hamilton, Gord Frederickson, Bill Rawson, Ward Sanderson, Dennis Quigley and Steve Matheson also have played for the national title previously.

Hamilton played in the 1961 series and recorded the only shutout in Mann Cup history when Vancouver blanked Brampton 13-0. Hamilton still plays with a lot of spirit despite his age—38—and recently scored a goal in the first game of the finals against Victoria.

Brampton, the Eastern Canada senior champions, goes into the series as the underdog, but the Burrards aren't taking the Excelsiors lightly.

Liske Likes Way Ross Finds Holes in Zones

WINNIPEG (CP) — A newcomer who stung the Winnipeg Blue Bomber secondary in their last meeting with British Columbia Lions likely will be buzzing around again tonight in a return encounter.

Flanker Ross Clarkson, a product of Simon Fraser University (SFU), drew his first starting assignment with the Lions last Thursday and made his presence felt.

The 5-foot-10, 175-pounder caught four Peter Liske passes for 116 yards, including a 68-yard touchdown strike, as the Lions defeated the Bombers 29-17.

Liske says he likes to throw to the elusive Clarkson because he can get into the open quickly "and knows where to find the holes in the zone defences."

Clarkson first joined the Lions in 1973 but saw limited action. He sat out the 1974 season for a little globetrotting, visiting places in Europe and Mexico before returning to Vancouver for another try at football.

He began the current season riding the bench as a backup to regular flanker Brock Aynsley and split end Slade Willis.

While Liske hopes to employ Clarkson in another successful assault against Winnipeg, the Bombers are out to avenge their last defeat.

"After the Saskatchewan game, Ron Lancaster and I were talking and he told me it was the best game he'd ever seen Chuck Ealey call," Riley said of the 27-23 loss to the Roughriders.

"I thought he did a pretty good job in Vancouver, too. Our offence got over 400 yards in Regina and over 300 against the Lions. You can't ask for much more than that."

The game is not televised.

Greg Neeld Files Anti-Trust Suit

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Greg Neeld, a Canadian junior hockey player who continued to play the sport despite the loss of an eye two years ago, filed a $4.5 million anti-trust suit Monday against the National Hockey League.

The suit claims the NHL and its member teams have conspired to prevent Neeld, 20, from becoming a professional player even though he was selected by Buffalo Sabres in the fourth round of the NHL's June draft of amateurs.

Neeld played last year for Calgary Centennials of the Western Canada Hockey League. He was with Toronto Mariboros of the Ontario Hockey Association Major Junior A series in the 1973-74 season when he lost sight in his left eye from a stick accident during a league game.

Neeld is asking $1.5 million in damages, which would be trebled under U.S. anti-trust laws.

The NHL has a rule prohibiting players with less than 25 per cent vision in an eye.

England in Final

A goal by Janet Jurischka at 20 minutes of the first half moved England into Wednesday's final against the winner of today's match between the Netherlands and Wales.

In other games in the top section Monday, Wales edged Australia 2-1, India defeated Belgium 2-1 and Scotland blanked Spain 3-0.

Engine Woes Halt Forsyth

EDMONTON—A blown engint in his 1973 Laguna cost Terry Forsyth of Victoria a chance for the championship of the Export "A" Western NASCAR series for stock cars.

Reg Kennedy of Surrey won the points title after a seventh-place finish here Sunday in the last race of the series. Eric Wowler of Edmonton led from the start to finish to win the race. He finished second in points, 14 behind Kennedy's 641 total.

Forsyth, who was tied for second in points at one stage of series, lost his engine on lap 30 of the200-lap main event and finished out of the running.

Chalk Players Love Sandy

Times News Service

Jockey Sandy Hawley, whose travels give meaning to the term journeyman rider, made the chalk players happy Monday at Exhibition Park in Vancouver.

Hawley, Canada's leading rider the past five years, was on his second visit here from Toronto and took three mounts on the card. Two of them were winners while the other finished sixth.

Hawley's first winner came aboard Darshan's Reward ($3.00) in the second. Johnny Two Dance ($3.50) was his second winner in the seventh.

The 26-year-old Hawley achieved his greatest fame two years ago when he became the first jockey to ride more than 500 winners in a season. He was accompanied on his visit this time by agent Colin Wick.

Wick said he and Hawley have no plans to improve on his 1973 riding performance. To achieve the 515 winners Hawley had to ride more than 1,900 mounts at tracks from coast to coast in both Canada and the U.S.

The next objective for Hawley, said Wick, is the money championship in North America.

TV Dispute Ending

TORONTO (CP) — The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation reported Monday it has learned that a compromise agreement has been reached on European television broadcast rights for the 1976 Olympics in Montreal.

The CBC said one of its correspondents had learned that the Montreal Olympic Organizing Committee had reached agreement in principle with the European Broadcasting Union and details of the agreement were to be announced Friday.

The compromise price for the TV rights was reported to be $10 million, well short of the $16.2 million the Canadian organizers had been seeking. The EBU had previously refused to pay more than $8.2 million.

Earlier Monday, the EBU announced in London it had extended until next Monday the deadline for completing negotiations.

Ghosts of Past Heroes Haunt the Big Leagues

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Some of their compatriots find something very sad about baseball players whom former Philadelphia Phillies star Richie Ashburn once called the "used-to-wases."

Those are the stars of last year, the stars of longstanding who may have lingered beyond their stardom. They are people like Brooks Robinson, currently batting below .200; Harmon Killebrew, batting only a few points above that mark; Hank Aaron, hitting about .230.

Cincinnati Reds manager Sparky Anderson thinks about the phenomenon when he watches Willie McCovey hit. He remembers McCovey as the San Francisco strongman, who was one of the most dangerous hitters in the game.

"This much," said Anderson, holding his fingers an inch apart. "That's all it takes. The reflexes slip that much. You watch Willie McCovey pop up a pitch that five years ago he would have put into orbit and it hurts.

"I see him do it against our kid pitchers and I hear them talk about how they got Willie McCovey out. I just go up to them and tell them 'Son, that wasn't Willie McCovey you got out. That was a ghost of Willie McCovey. You throw him that same pitch five years ago and you don't see the ball again until the umpire throws you a new one'."

Anderson isn't sure what makes a ballplayer stick around and slip into the "used-to-wases" class.

"I can't say for sure whether it's they have lived so long so high that they can't accept giving up the big pay check, or if they want to feed their ego, put that uniform on and listen to the cheers of the crowd."

Pete Rose is 34 years old. He is still hitting .300, but he can look at some of the stars who are languishing in the twilight of their careers and he understands.

"It isn't really their skill that they lose," he said. "It's their desire."

The spring trainings, year after year, the travel, the sameness of it, argues Rose, robs them of their determination.

"You know," he said, "they don't play a lot any more. That could be why they aren't hitting much. That's why I want to play every day. It isn't that I've played in 308 straight games. That means nothing.

"It's just that some day they're gonna ask me to hang 'em up and when they do I'll wish I'd played in all those games."

A's Upstage the Royals With Same Old Script

By The Associated Press

It looked like a World Series game. There was a big crowd at the Oakland Coliseum, the game meant something and, of course, the A's won.

"We proved again that this team plays a little better when the games mean a lot and when a lot of people turn out to watch us," said Sal Bando, the Oakland captain who contributed a home run and two singles to an explosive A's attack that beat Kansas City Royals 8-2 Monday night.

Elsewhere in the American League, New York Yankees blanked Detroit Tigers 3-0, Cleveland Indians defeated Boston Red Sox 4-1 and Baltimore Orioles beat Milwaukee Brewers 6-2.

The script seems to be the same every year. The A's play as well as they have to in winning the American League West, then they play better than everybody else in sweeping to the baseball championship.

Last year, Texas made a September run at the A's but fell five games short. This year it's the Royals, who might as well pack up their bats and balls. Oakland's Claudell Washington says their season is over.

Do the Royals, now six games back, have a chance?

"No chance, no chance at all," Washington said. "If they won this game they would have had a chance. They had to sweep the series but they blew it."

A crowd of 38,735 saw the A's manhandle the Royals on home runs by Gene Tenace, Bando and Washington and Ken Holtzman's five-hit pitching.

Washington snapped a 2-2 sixth-inning tie with a 400-foot homer, his first since June 20, when he also connected against Kansas City's Dennis Leonard.

BREMNER SLAPPED WITH LIFETIME BAN

GLASGOW (Reuter) — Billy Bremner, one of the world's top soccer players, and four other Scottish internationals were banned Monday from playing for their country again.

The Scottish Football Association announced the life bans of Bremner, the Scottish captain, and Joe Harper, Willie Young, Arthur Graham and Pat McCluskey after a two-hour a meeting of the international selection committee.

The committee was inquiring into reports of misbehavior by Scottish players in a Copenhagen nightclub after the European championship match against Denmark last Wednesday, which Scotland won 1-0 on a goal by Harper.

Police were summoned after an argument and, although no charges were laid, the five Scots were ejected.

An Extra Day For Last Chance

Eagerness of Vancouver island tennis players for competition has added an extra day to the second annual Last Chance tournament.

After receiving more than 100 entries for the tourney, officials of the Vancouver Island Lawn Tennis Association decided to run competition over four days, instead of three days as originally planned.

Matches at the Island Indoor courts will now get under way on Thursday evening, continuing daily until finals on Sunday.

Because of the importance of promptness, tournament officials stress that contestants must report to the starter 15 minutes prior to scheduled playing times or risk default.

Steel Mill 'Won't Cut Jobless'

VANCOUVER (CP) — A confidential report to the provincial government indicates that a major steel mill in British Columbia would probably make little difference to the province's unemployment rate, according to The Sun.

In its Monday edition, the evening newspaper quotes the report as saying most of the steel produced by a proposed mill would be exported.

A team of economists reported in February, 1974, that the mill would rely totally on foreign iron ore supplies, would not satisfy B.C.'s wide range of steel needs, and might cause serious environmental damage, the paper says.

Eight months after receiving the assessment the government signed an agreement with Nippon Kokan Kisha of Japan for a $1.23-million, one-year feasibility study to examine the steel-mill proposal, the paper says.

The integrated steel mill would include blast furnaces, basic oxygen furnaces and rolling and finishing facilities. The government and the company are sharing costs of the study equally.

A decision on building the mill is expected by Christmas.

The report sent to Economic Development Minister Gary Lauk Feb. 21, 1974, and labelled "confidential," was written by three University of B.C. economics professors — R. A. Shearer, J. D. Boyd and J. A. Rae.

Lauk has said the quest for a site has been narrowed down to Kitimat and Prince George.

The Sun says the report was prepared for an executive committee appointed by Lauk to review steel production and marketing in B.C.

The report outlines four steel production alternatives and says most of them are designed to exploit the province's vast deposits of coking coal and its "potential tidewater locations" for construction of a deep-water port.

The report warns that the government should not consider establishing a steel industry merely as a sign of economic development, the paper adds.

"We see no particular prestige conferred on this area by the creation of a Pittsburgh, a Gary, Ind., or a Hamilton, Ont." The report obtained by the Sun says.

"The proposal must be shown to have decisive economic and social advantages, or at least to have no overwhelming social costs, before the government should consider formal, direct support."

The report quoted by The Sun says an integrated steel mill producing three million tons of steel a year could employ as many as 6,000 workers but such a large project would inevitably draw many workers from outside the province.

Delta Link Cost Set Over $105M

Canadian Press

Highways Minister Graham Lea told the Greater Vancouver Regional District on Monday that a bridge or tunnel link between Delta, Surrey and the Vancouver area would cost between $105 million and $141 million.

The minister based his figures, which were included in a letter to Regional District Chairman Allan Kelly, on a report of the Annacis Island crossing feasibility study committee. The report was sent in detail to area mayors affected by the proposal.

Lea said a proposed new bridge across the south arm of the Fraser River would require 230 acres of land, acquisition of 121 houses and would cost $105 million.

An alternate scheme includes a new crossing of the north arm about one mile west of the Queensborough bridge and a tunnel under the south arm. It would require 360 acres, displacement of 103 houses and would cost $141 million.

The group was formed early this summer. Ninety-three per cent of the cast is Canadian, including some Olympic and world class skaters.

The two Victorians are Janine Richardson, who spent two years with Holiday on Ice before joining the new venture, and Linda Roe, who is in her first professional ice show.

Bernard Ford, a five-time world champion in pairs dance class 1968-73 is director-choreographer. Ford has created the routines to include athletic competition level jumps and figures.

Show times will be 8 p.m. Friday and Sunday and a Saturday matinee at 2 p.m.

Barrett All Braced For Whirlwind Tour

Premier Barrett begins a whirlwind trip through south central British Columbia next week, the first leg of what is being billed as Barrett's 1975 Autumn Tour of the province.

The premier will be in Kelowna and Penticton on Sept. 15, Oliver and Greenwood on the 16th, Grand Forks, Rossland, and Trail on the 17th, Creston and Fernie on the 18th and Kimberley and Cranbrook on the 19th.

On Sept. 22 he returns to the coast to address a conference on coal at the Hotel Vancouver and will leave immediately after for Kamloops.

His itinerary then takes him to Chase, Armstrong, Salmon Arm and Vernon on Sept. 23, and the day following to Enderby, Sicamous, Malalwa and Revelstoke.

His tour is interrupted on Sept. 25 for a speech in Vancouver to the Young Presidents' organization but he returns to Golden that evening for a public meeting at the Civic Centre. The next day he travels to Invermere and finally to Cranbrook and back to Victoria.

The second leg of his tour is Oct. 6 to 18 and takes him north. Details of his itinerary have not been released but one of the places the premier and his party hope to visit is Toms Lake, in the Cassiar district, a small community of former German socialists who settled there between the First and Second World Wars.

A spokesman for the premier's office said the purpose of the tour is to get a grassroots understanding of local problems and issues.

Some Pupils Shifted From Gordon Head

A group of children newly registered at Gordon Head elementary school will be shifted to Hillcrest elementary to relieve overcrowding at Gordon Head.

Enrolment at Gordon Head on opening day was 766, well above the 710 expected, and enrolments normally increase during the year.

Hillcrest elementary school has an enrolment 50 below what was expected, so district assistant superintendent Dr. John Wiens asked trustees Monday to approve shifting some students to Hillcrest.

Students moved will be those newly registered at Gordon Head, Wiens said.

Enrolment on Sept. 3 was 28,351, an even greater drop from last year's 29,278 than had been predicted.

Most schools will gain students during September, so the original enrolment prediction of 28,712 could be fairly accurate by the time the final Sept. 30 count is taken, Wiens said.

18 Months For Rape

A Victoria man was sentenced in B.C. Supreme Court in Vancouver Monday to 18 months in jail for rape.

Sheldon James Cornell was convicted of taking a 17-year-old girl to her Vancouver home at knife-point May 11, 1974, and sexually assaulting her there.

A previous record but with no sex or violence offences was alleged for the accused.

He told Mr. Justice S. M. Toy he became involved in crime because of bitterness and resentment at not being accepted by society. His life has changed and he now wants to work for God, said Cornell.

One Victoria minister told the court Cornell has recently joined his church and wants to change his way of life.

Y SEEKING FUNDS

The Victoria YM-YWCA has begun a new fund-raising campaign to raise $1,350,000 for a teaching pool and five handball-racquetball courts.

Larry Martell, chairman of the expansion campaign, said finance for the construction of the building will be through pledges from large firms.

"The original building, erected in 1965, now serves over 11,000 people each year and is overcrowded during peak periods," he said.

"The need for additional facilities increases every year with our growing population and increased awareness of the need for health and recreation activities . . . it is hoped that the proposed expansion will satisfy this need."

Martell added that the expansion will, in the long run, give the Y greater economic self-sufficiency.

"The handball-racquetball courts will bring in more adults and therefore more money but will require no additional janitorial or teaching staff."

He said that in 1968, 29 per cent of the Y's budget came from United Way. In 1974 it was down to 14 per cent and it is hoped that through expansion of facilities, the amount of money needed ffom United Way to operate the Y will be even less.

Anyone wishing to give pledges for the expansion campaign can call 385-7511.

Manitoba Orders Support

WINNIPEG (CP) — The Manitoba government has ordered all its departments, crown corporations and agencies to buy their general insurance from the Manitoba Public Insurance Corp., Public Insurance Minister Bill Uruski confirmed Monday.

Uruski, interviewed by telephone from Halifax where he is attending a conference, said he issued a directive in July, telling heads of all government agencies and crown corporations they must buy their general insurance through the government-run scheme.

The directive also orders the various arms of government to contact the Manitoba Public Insurance Corp.

Directly concerning general insurance policies which expired July 1, 1975 or later. This would in effect cut out any agents or brokers.

Spokesmen for private insurance companies expressed little surprise at the move, which they estimated will take away about $2 million in premiums annually from private insurance companies.

More Business Failures Now

TORONTO (CP) — Business failures in Canada in the first half of 1975 increased substantially from a year ago, says a report by Dun and Bradstreet of Canada Ltd.

The report says there were 1,568 bankruptcies in the six-month period — including 231 in June — compared with 1,313 in 1974 and 201 in June that year.

Liabilities as a result of bankruptcies totalled $225.7 million for the first six months of 1975, compared with $137.2 million a year ago. Liabilities in June, 1975, were $32.2 million compared with $19.1 million in June, 1974.

The report says Ontario leads the list for the most bankruptcies both in June and the first six months of the year. One hundred companies failed in June, compared with 78 a year ago, bringing the six-month total to 667 from 505 in 1974. Debts left unpaid were $9.9 million in June and $72 million for the six months. In 1974, June figures were $8.5 million to bring the total to $47.3 million for six months.

The 20 British Columbia business failures in June left unpaid debts of $2.7 million to increase the six-month total to 164 businesses with $43.5 million in unpaid debts.

In June, 1974, 19 businesses failed leaving debts of $2.2 million. Six-month totals for 1974 were 138 failures with $14.4 million in debts.

Quebec reported fewer bankruptcies in June — 72, compared with 86 a year ago — but the liability total was up sharply at $15.1 million from $6.4 million.

The six-month totals were 509 failures in 1975, compared with 474 in 1974, and liabilities of $73.5 million compared with $55.1 million a year ago.

Alberta reported 25 business failures in June — compared with five a year ago — and liabilities of $2 million compared with $378,000 in June, 1974. In the first six months of 1975 there were 125 business failures with debts left unpaid of $17.4 million. In the first six months of 1974, 93 businesses failed and left unpaid debts of $6.6 million.

Saskatchewan recorded one business failure in June which left debts unpaid of $339,000 and brought the six-month total to nine failures with $622,000 in unpaid debts. One business failed in June, 1974, leaving unpaid debts of $54,000.

Games TV Accord?

TORONTO (CP) — A compromise agreement has been reached on European television broadcast rights for the 1976 Olympics in Montreal, the CBC reported Monday.

In television and radio reports, the CBC said one of its correspondents learned the Montreal Olympic Organizing Committee had reached agreement in principle with the European Broadcasting Union and details of the agreement were to be announced Friday.

The compromise price for the TV rights was reported to be $10 million, well short of the $16.2 million the Canadian organizers had been seeking.

The EBU had previously refused to pay more than $8.2 million.

Earlier Monday, the EBU announced in London it had extended until next Monday the deadline for completing negotiations. The previous deadline had been last Friday.

Hearings 'Boosted' Tel Rates

OTTAWA (CP) — Telephone users would have saved money this year if telephone companies did not have to undergo public hearings for all rate increases, B. M. Longden, a Canadian transport commission official, said Monday.

Longden, a telecommunications costing expert, said that a formula for automatic adjustments to cover such costs as inflation would have yielded Bell Canada and B.C. Tel less than they got from the commission after public hearings.

Monday's hearing was called to hear views of Bell, B.C. Tel, CN-CP Telecommunications, the Consumers' Association of Canada and the provinces of B.C., Ontario and Quebec on proposals for an automatic rate adjustment formula.

The commission will then decide whether to launch full-scale hearings on what sort of formula should be introduced.

Anne Carver, chairman of the commission's telecommunications committee, said an automatic formula would not replace all public hearings. But it would make them less frequent, less expensive and shorter.

She said she is sure that if such a formula is adopted the results would be reviewed within two or three years at a public hearing.

Nfld. Tunnel to Labrador

FRESHWATER, Nfld. (CP) — An undersea tunnel designed to carry electricity to Newfoundland from Labrador also will be used to transport passengers and vehicles, Premier Frank Moores said Monday night.

In his first major announcement in the campaign for the Sept. 16 provincial general election, the premier told a Progressive Conservative rally in this community near Placentia, 90 miles west of St. John's, that no problems will be encountered in building a limited transportation system.

Preparatory work for excavation of the 1,500-foot vertical entrance shafts is already under way.

The tunnel, to be 17 feet high and 14 feet wide, was planned as a means of transmitting electricity from the Lower Churchill site near Goose Bay to the island, beneath the seabed of the Strait of Belle Isle.

Moores said passengers, freight and vehicles could be whisked across the strait through the tunnel in 20 minutes on a small electric train.

Persons and goods would enter the tunnel on high-speed elevators installed in the entrance shafts.

He said in an interview after the speech that cost of the transportation system had not been worked out. But the only additional money needed would be for rolling stock.

The premier quoted from a letter written to him by Newfoundland and Labrador Hydro Corp., a Crown corporation and parent of the company developing the Lower Churchill, which said there would be no problem to install the transportation system.

BARGES UNLOADING

PRUDHOE BAY, Alaska (AP) — All 10 of the barges that reached Prudhoe Bay with supplies for the Alaska pipeline should be unloaded by the end of the week, says a spokesman from Arctic marine freighters.

The big headache now is how to get the tugs back around Point Barrow before weather conditions worsen.

Keith Kirkeide, Crowley Maritime executive, said Monday that winter is beginning to set in on the Alaska north coast.

"There's a little ice forming on the bay, the temperature's about 20 degrees (farenheit) — and from the forecasts it doesn't look like there will be any warmer temperatures for the next four or five days," he said.

Davis Woos Pensioners

BRAMPTON, Ont. (CP) — Premier William Davis announced further financial assistance to Ontario pensioners Monday night.

The province will increase monthly income supplement to 300,000 recipients under the Guaranteed Annual Income Program by a further $6.02 a month, he announced.

Davis said in the statement as he campaigned toward the Sept. 18 provincial general election that it would bring the total gains payment to $30.04 per month and total monthly payments, including federal pension, to $250 a month per person.

The premier also announced that 100,000 gains recipients who live in rental accommodation would get up to $25 a month in financial help from the province under a new rental supplement program.

The rental program "is designed to cushion the impact on pension incomes of rent increases in excess of 12 per cent annually," he said.

The programs will cost an estimated $18 million annually and will be financed to the maximum degree possible by a re-ordering of existing spending priorities, he said.

Meanwhile, C. W. Daniel, president of Shell Canada Ltd., said Monday tha Ontario's decision to extend the freeze on gasoline and oil prices means "that the long-term energy interests of Canada must suffer the effects of short-term political advantage."

Daniel became the second major oil company president ot comment on the political aspect of Davis' decision to extend the freeze to Nov. 15 from Sept. 30.

Earlier, J. A. Armstrong, president of Imperial Oil Ltd., said Davis' decision "Can only be construed as an act of political desperation."

"It buys votes today at the expense of tomorrow," Armstrong said.

Daniel, in a prepared statement, said Shell had demonstrated at the current provincial inquiry into oil pricing that a freeze would divert millions of dollars away from development, vital to meet Canada's future energy needs.

Indian Vigilantes Eyed for Regina

REGINA (CP) — Owners of downtown hotels and members of the Regina branch of the Warriors Society are discussing the possibility of establishing a native street patrol to reduce violence in the downtown area.

Two of the four society members proposing the patrol say they were involved in one serious brawl at the Drake Hotel two weeks ago, while a third has been charged with extorting $5 worth of liquor from another hotel the night of that brawl.

In an interview, the four, who declined to give their last names, said they are serious about the patrol proposal because police do not understand the problems of native people.

They also criticized the special police "task force" set up recently in response to downtown violence and said the 20 members of the task force tend to provoke trouble.

"Indians are getting harassed more than usual and it is creating more distrust than ever between natives and the police," said Wayne, the one facing the extortion charge.

All four agreed that racial tension is one of the main factors contributing to increased violence in the downtown area this summer.

"They call us Indians, so we call people honkys," said Jerome, one of the two involved in the brawl.

He and the other participants, Keith, said the brawl, which caused $1,000 damage and sent two hotel employees to hospital, was started in retaliation for a hotel employee's action in allegedly roughing one of them up without cause.

Another story, ho wever, was given by beverage room manager John Clark, who said in an interview the brawl started after he threw out a person who was sprawled in a chair, refused to "act civilized", and made an insulting remark.

Clark, who was knocked out in the brawl and had 12 stitches to close one cut, said he did not lay charges in connection with the brawl because he cannot identify the participants.

He said he tried to punch one man, "but I don't know his name."

"They all look alike."

Harry Kangles, Regina director of the Saskatchewan Hotels Association, said he has discussed the native patrol idea with the four and is setting up a meeting involving more hotel representatives.

The Warriors Association made a similar proposal last fall but it was rejected by police and hotelmen, Kangle said.

LIFE TERM UPHELD

WINNIPEG (CP) — The Manitoba Court of Appeal Monday upheld a sentence of life imprisonment by a 3-2 margin against a man convicted of attempted murder in connection with an explosion that blew off the left hand of a court official.

John Rogers, 53, was convicted last February after Charles Gilraine, chief clerk of the Winnipeg County Court, had his hand blown off when an electric clock received through the mail exploded after being plugged in.

Rogers, making the appeal on his own behalf, told the court he was not properly represented when convicted.

"I can see no reason to disturb the sentence," said Mr. Justice A. M. Mennin, speaking for the majority decision of the court.

'Ladies Nights' Upheld

CALGARY (CP) — An Alberta Board of Inquiry has ruled that cabarets can charge men and women unequal prices for identical services without being guilty of discrimination.

Ron Payne of Calgary htd complained that a city hotel cabaret was being discriminatory by letting women in free Thursday nights while charging males its regular $1.50 admission fee.

Considering the complaint to be justified, the Alberta Human Rights Commission requested the provincial labor minister to appoint a board of inquiry and Kevin Murphy, a Calgary lawyer, was appointed to make the inquiry.

Murphy decided Payne's charge was not justified because the hotel was legitimately trying to improve its business and had not seriously affronted men's dignity.

The Canadian Press carried an erroneous report Aug. 14 that said the Alberta Human Rights Commission had made the ruling in the cabaret case and that identified Murphy as a commission member.

CALGARY (CP) — Alberta Liberal leader Nick Taylor Monday expressed fears that Alberta may have sold oil to British Columbia with nothing in return. Alberta at least could have got design and engineering contracts for a proposed refinery in B.C. exchange for the crude oil, he said.

REGINA (CP) — The chairman of the northern municipal council, Lawrence Yew, Monday accused the Defence Department of arrogantly refusing to negotiate with northern residents near the Primrose air weapons range. Despite demands that compensation agreements with area residents be renegotiated, the federal and provincial governments last year renewed their agreement providing for military use of the 1.5 million acre range on the Alberta-Saskatchewan border. Yew said residents of three villages were left out of compensation arrangements.

PRINCE ALBERT (CP) — An informal investigation launched at Prince Albert penitentiary following discovery last month of two sawed-off shotguns and some ammunition is expected to be completed by the end of this week, director Jim O'Sullivan said Monday. O'Sullivan said the report will be evaluated to determine what changes must be made. "We cannot see the area where security needs to be improved."

STANDARD, Alta. (CP) — Collin Nelson, 22, of Standard, was killed Sunday night when a light plane crashed in a field about two miles southwest of here. He was the lone occupant of the plane, which encountered engine failure.

High and dry on the highway at the Shawnigan Lake cutoff on Monday was this 33-foot double-ender being towed from Shawnigan Lake to Oak Bay by Don's Boat Transfer. The truck jacknifed after swerving to avoid a stopped vehicle, toppling the boat, which sustained minimal damage.

TOWN TALK

Fancy a stroll in a huge grassy hole?

That's what Victorians will be able to do by the spring, say the developers of the hotel-apartment-commercial complex at Laurel Point.

Although construction is under way for the first phase of the project, the condominium apartments and luxury townhouses, the hotel itself has been deferred for an unstated period.

So by the spring the developers plan to grass over the hotel site, to make it look as decent as possible until construction starts.

City council wondered last week whether it would be practical to landscape the excavations, but Canadian Freehold Properties represenatives assured aldermen it would.

They said the public park around the foreshore — which the firm must provide under its land-use contract — will also be ready by the spring.

One Victoria resident, at least, is less than thrilled about city council's recent decision to prohibit under its anti-noise bylaw locomotive whistling and bell ringing at two railway crossings in Victoria West.

"At a time when society is concerned with safety your action could cost lives and you could be accused of causing them," warns G. C. Vivian, 27 Gorge Road, in a letter to City Hall.

He points out that the railway has been there for 78 years, and Vic West residents must have been aware of it when they moved in.

The city should pay more attention to cracking down on the real noise offenders such as motorcycles and large trucks, Vivian suggests.

The Joke's on You!

From the masters of the art Town Talk had hoped to bring you this week a jest or two, some mirthful merriment, to help you forget the woes of inflation, strikes and all the rest.

Alas, 'twas not to be.

For when our faithful scribe approached the jokesperson of an organization called the Royal Order of Jesters, which was holding its weekend convention at The Empress, the fellow politely refused to be interviewed.

Goodness no, he said, it's a very private group and they never, but never, seek any publicity.

A pity. Well never mind, did you hear the one about . . .

What is it that makes an otherwise law-abiding citizen thumb his nose at authority by stoking up his stinking backyard incinerator at illegal times?

Oak Bay must have the most compulsive incinerator-users in the nation and they didn't resist the urge on the Labor Day weekend.

The municipality has a bylaw (effective June to the end of September) which allows burning only from dawn to 11 a.m. on weekdays. No burning is allowed on Sundays, Dominion Day, B.C. Day or Labor Day.

Reminders are even sent out with water bills — along with warnings against burning grass clippings or putting vegetable peelings and discarded food on compost heaps. All to little avail in some neighborhoods.

The little lady of the house is among the worst offenders. There she is in her nightgown and curlers getting her morning jollies by stuffing Old Stinky and polluting the neighborhood.

Could a psychiatrist explain this burning desire?

Today's the day Nanaimo St. resident R. Peter Boone said Victoria was going to sink beneath the waves unless there was a "spiritual change" in people around here.

Boone made his prediction last May 26, that all land below a line running from the Saanich Peninsula through Killarney Lake to Macaulay Point would sink Sept. 9.

Town Talk had no luck reaching Boone today. Maybe he decided not to stick around for the holocaust.

Here's the language proposed:

". . . the district . . . may enter upon, break up, take or enter into possession of, and use any real or personal property within the district not publicly owned where necessary or convenient for any of the purposes of the district without the consent of the owners of the real or personal property, but subject to division (4) or part XII of theMunicipal Act."

At a time when the British capital's tourist industry is reported to be suffering from the carnage of recent bomb terrorism in hotels and restaurants, it seems ironical that the Toronto office of the British Tourist Authority should be trying to lure Canadians to London with tales of historical horrors.

The London Dungeon, says a BTA press release, is the "latest attraction for bloodthirsty visitors."

In ghoulish gloating the blurb continues: "Next door to Tower Bridge subway station and across the river from the Tower of London, the dark, cold ex-wine vaults depict the blackest pages of British history in a series of tableaux: disease and demons, murders and martyrs, tortures and sacrifice. This new macabre museum is open daily."

Macabre p.r., we call it. And by the way, what is — or was — ex-wine?

That would appear to be the underlying message of two news items in the current edition of the Campbell River Courier.

One reports that 30 per cent of Campbell River residents interviewed during a community needs survey had never heard of the department of human resources.

Another says that same department is receiving "an increasing caseload of strikers seeking welfare as the forest industry shutdown continues."

Presumably, then, the aware 70 per cent of the population included a high proportion of forest industry employees.

Much good may it do them, for the newspaper offers this quote from a department spokesman: "Basically, our policy is not to grant welfare to strikers."

L. F. Murray, chief curator of the Canadian War Museum in Ottawa, is appealing for officers and, particularly, seamen's uniforms from the Second World War and postwar periods.

Region Director Quits In 'Total Frustration'

Ken Rainey, only original member of the Capital Regional Board, has resigned as director "because of the total frustration in trying to represent a rural area on a board dominated by the four core municipalities."

Rainey represented Metchosin and was appointed by the provincial government when the regional board was formed almost 10 years ago, winning re-election since then.

Although his current term is up at the end of the year, he said he couldn't wait until then.

"I feel helpless in trying to represent my district and this is the only thing I can honestly do."

Among reasons for his resignation:

— regional planners ignoring the wishes of Metchosin residents by including residential development in a proposed community plan.

— long-delayed hospital development, caused primarily by Victoria, which should have made provision for better rural coverage long before now.

— "doctoring" of a soil removal bylaw by the provincial government so it fails to provide the intended protection in rural areas.

a "drifting away" from the board thinking regionally to a policy of "city first, rural second."

On the community plan for the so-called western community, which includes Metchosin, Rainey said "I've had it up to here with the planning department ignoring our wishes."

The official regional plan specifies no urban encroachment into Metchosin but planners are proposing housing development land dip into Metchosin.

"They told me that the province is buying land in the area and they were trying to accommodate provincial housing plans in the western sector. This is not their job — to cater to the province. They must abide by the law, the same as Joe Blow."

Rainey said he has been able to reduce the size of encroachment but not eliminate it.

The community plan is still in the draft stage and will be examined at further public meetings before going to the regional board.

Board chairman Jim Campbell said today he regrets Rainey's decision and has tried without success to talk him out of it.

"I can't agree with everything he says but I experience the same sort of frustration he does . . . If hospitals were a dominant interest of mine, I think I'd be out of my mind."

On hospitals, Rainey said the city of Victoria, in an effort to maintain Victoria General Hospital, has been a major factor in hospital construction delays which have continued for years.

"If it wasn't for Stephen (former Victoria Mayor Hugh Stephen) we would have had a hospital somewhere on the peninsula or in the Helmcken area long before now."

Although various past reports suggested a hospital outside the city centre, the city deliberately held matters up until it got its way on Victoria General.

The situation has now gone full circle, he said, with the region once again looking for a hospital site in the outer area.

"But now land values have skyrocketed as well as the cost of construction."

Rainey, a machinist for a city firm, said the regional board has become too big for a working man to adequately represent an area.

"I spend one day a week trying to get information but the Capital Regional Board is now too big and too complex. In the beginning it was okay because we only had hospitals and parks and you could do the job properly. But not now.

"If the taxpayers want representation, they will have to pay for it . . . it's the only way. I've lost a lot of wages over board business and it can't continue."

J. M. (Mac) Tipton, Rainey's alternate on the board, will take his place on the board for the balance of the year. The seats of all seven directors from electoral areas are up for election in November.

12 Pages Of Tax Protests

Organized by an ad hoc committee, the residents have submitted a 12-page petition of signatures to Saanich council.

The petition states that the area, which the residents claim has the minimum of municipal services, has had the highest increase in property taxes — 26 per cent.

Dated Aug. 25, copies of the petition have been sent to Premier Dave Barrett and other members of the provincial government.

The petition objects to the manner in which savings accrued during the three-month lockout were immediately lost through accelerating costs of municipal government.

Eric McMorran of 5110 Cordova Bay Road didn't sign the petition because he wasn't contacted but agrees the area is badly serviced for the amount of taxes residents must pay.

False Alarm Breaks Sleep

A false alarm aboard a tug caused Fairfield residents to wake to the sound of a helicopter at 5 a.m. today.

A Pacific Rescue Co-ordination Centre spokesman said a U.S. coast guard helicopter was called to investigate an emergency signal being monitored on the emergency frequency.

The helicopter traced the signal to the Vancouver-based tug Evco Breeze. She had a search initiator buoy aboard and the buoy's emergency signal had been tripped inadvertently.

LANDLORD CHARGED

Bale Khudra, a landlord at 614 Esquimalt Rd., was remanded to Dec. 8.

Defence lawyer Herbert Matthews plans to dispute provincial court's jurisdiction to handle any of the charges.

Charges against Khudra allege rent increases between Feb. 28 and July 24 given without three months' notice and above the legal 10.6 per cent increase limit.

Khudra is also charged with unlawful eviction of four tenants.

He appeared before Judge Edmond St. Jorre, who told the court he has acted as legal counsel for Khudra and his family in the past and should not judge the case.

"Not only should justice be done, but it should appear to be done," said St. Jorre.

Laymore Lay-Off

Rising costs and old age has resulted in the paying off of the navy's auxiliary vessel Laymore on Feb. 15.

Her useable stores and equipment will be removed and she will be put on the market by the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation.

Her master, Capt. M. H. J. Dyer and crew of 25 will be transferred to other jobs at CFB Esquimalt.

Built in Kewanee, Wisconsin, in 1945 for the Royal Canadian Navy, for the past four years the Laymore has been kept afloat by a cost-sharing arrangement between the department of national defence and the federal department of the environment.

Three-quarters of her cost and work was for the environment department during the four years.

Environment department spokesman Dr. Bill English said today escalating costs and shrinking resources had forced the department to terminate the Laymore contract. He said she cost the department $300,000 a year to operate.

"We are definitely feeling the pinch," he said. "We had to come to the point somewhere along the line. She's a fine old ship but the cost went up and up and up each time she had to have a refit."

English said the gap left by the Laymore will be filled by contracting out oceanographic services and the use of charter vessels.

He said a five-year charter of the Pandora II from an east coast company would relieve the situation.

"She (Pandora) was fitted and built especially for our purpose," he explained.

Originally desighed for service in the Pacific, the Laymore was used as a supply vessel, ammunition carrier and coastal freighter prior to her conversion to an oceanographic vessel in 1966.

She has also been used as a mine-layer and recovery vessel for joint Canadian-United States naval exercises.

As an oceanographic research vessel, the Laymore has served the Defence Research Board, the Defence Research Establishment (Pacific), as well as the University of Victoria, Simon Fraser University and the University of British Columbia.

No Blues, Good News: Trustees

The sex and birth control manual Rhythm and Blues got short shrift from most trustees Monday when it was brought before Greater Victoria school board's curriculum committee.

"A degrading book," Trustee Daphne Temple called it.

"Sleazy, tawdry, . . . completely lacking in any sort of moral fibre," said trustee Peter Bunn.

"Frivolous, fanciful," said board chairman Bill Ross.

"I think it treats sex with the same degree of delicacy and dignity as the barnyard bull," said trustee Janet Baird.

"I realize that this publication is not in fact an ideal one," said Dr. Mark Fisher, who was proposing that the school board approve use of the controversial manual in high schools until better publications are available.

TEMPLE

Fisher said his work as a physician has made him realize the need for some booklet for teenagers on birth control and veneral disease.

Victoria has an incredibly high abortion rate, he said, and B.C. has the highest abortion rate in the country.

"VD is on the rise in a colossal way," he said.

Fisher got support only from trustee Phil Perry, who said that in his work as head of the Attendance Centre he has seen the need for a booklet like Rhythm and Blues, despite the "many, many mistakes" in the booklet.

The booklet was published under a 1973 Local Initiatives Project grant.

Trustees voted not to refer Fisher's proposal to Monday's board meeting, so the matter will be dropped.

Painful Separation

DEAR ABBY: I am confused and distraught. My daughter and her boyfriend, both in their late 20s, are self-supporting. They both experienced disastrous divorces in their 20s.

When they decided to live together six months ago, my husband and I were very upset since we don't believe couples should live together out of wedlock. We were very fond of Betty's boyfriend until this happened.

We told her how we felt and that we would not set foot in her house under those conditions. We further told her that as our beloved daughter she would always be welcome in our home but never to bring Alan with her.

She replied that she was sorry we felt that way, but she wouldn't think of marrying again without having first lived with the man for at least a year. Our only communication since that time was an anniversary card from her.

Today, I ran into Betty downtown. She bought me lunch, and we chatted like old times. She's happier and more mature now than I've ever seen her. When we parted, she said, "Remember, Mama, oud door is always open."

I cried all the way home. It's been a painful separation for all concerned. What do you think we should do? — Mama

DEAR MAMA: Do what your heart tells you to do. Call Betty and tell her that although the lifestyle she has chosen is not your style, you respect her right as a person to live her own life — and your door is open to her and any of her friends.

DEAR ABBY: My first cousin Randy and I got into a real shouting match last night, and I need you to back me up.

I say that Randy's children are my second cousins and THEIR children are my third cousins.

Randy says I'm wrong. If I'm wrong, what are Randy's children and grandchildren to me?

Also, if Randy's children are not my second cousins, who are?—Confused.

DEAR CONFUSED: Randy's children are NOT your second cousins. They are your first cousins, once removed. And Randy's grandchildren are your first cousins TWICE removed.

If your grandfather had brothers and sisters, THEIR grandchildren would be your second cousins.

Feds Crack Down On Unsafe Cribs

WINNIPEG (CP) — The federal department of consumer and corporate affairs is contuing its concerted efforts to halt the sale of both new and used unsafe baby cribs.

Te department confiscated more than 100 new cribs from a city furniture store this week, the latest in a series of nearly 30 seizures in Winnipeg since January, 1974.

John Armstrong, regional director of product safety for the federal government, said most of the seizures were made under the Hazardous Products act.

While some of the cribs have been destroyed, he said most are returned "on compliance with regulations."

"The number of unsafe cribs left in the stores is very small. Our emphasis now is on the tremendous trade in second-hand cribs, which are much more difficult to track down."

Armstrong said department statistics cite unsafe cribs as the cause of about five infant deaths in Canada each year.

Welch Medical Report

By WILLIAM J. WELCH

One of the troubling aspects of trying to find out if smoking marijuana is dangerous, or only an ill-advised martini-like habit, is that most of the experts cannot seem to make up their minds one way or the other.

While no one recommends smoking marijuana any more than one would encourage martinis, and everyone agrees that marijuana bends the mind into a misleading and illusory dream state, in 1973 alone some 400 scientific studies were published which either established or failed to establish the toxicity of marijuana.

Among the long-term and short-term ill effects of marijuana are said to be: (1) lowered resistance to infection, (2) damage to chromosomes, (3) imbalance of sex hormones, (4) organic brain damage, (5) inability to think clearly and perform effectively, (6) "a gradual development of aimlessness and blunted emotions," (7) "a counterfeit impression of calm and well being," and (8) "a prevailing illusion of recently developed insight and emotional maturity."

But almost as soon as reports of such damage appear, critics rise up who have found no such ill effects in their studies or who disparage as faulty the techniques by which the ill effects were demonstrated.

What are concerned parents to say if a teen-aged son or daughter puts it up to them, "Why shouldn't I smoke a joint? It feels good! And anyway, it's not as bad as your martini."

What indeed is a youngster to think if by chance he chooses to think for himself? What material can we give him?

One out of every seven North Americans is said to have tried marijuana, a figure that may or may not be accurate. It is probably as accurate as most extrapolated numbers, which are arrived at by sampling a limited number of people and then assuming the results are representative of the entire population.

Two million North Americans by similar estimates are said to smoke marijuana every day. It is further estimated that two million people smoke regularly, but not necessarily every day. And 14 per cent of 23-year-old youths use it daily.

Since it is a criminal misdemeanor to possess marijuana, some 420,000 smokers were arrested in a single year not so long ago.

There are roughly three schools of thought about the use of marijuana:

First, there are the smoking young who scoff at their elders as hypocritical, martini-drinking spoilsports and neo-prohibition agents who threaten them with non-existent dangers.

Second, there are many scientists who believe that they have demonstrated the manifest and dangerous toxicity of the drug.

Third, there are many scientists who believe no such thing.

And in the thick of the smoky confusion are government agencies charged with enforcing the prohibition of its use, as well as its sale.

Opposing the government legality are those who beat political drums to "decriminalize" the use of marijuana and to legalize its sale under government control, much as is now done with alcohol.

What, again, is a parent to say in the midst of such confusion? There is surely no easy answer, especially in this moment of general permissiveness in which the motive for doing most everything is whether or not it feels good.

But if we step back and take a long, hard look at the controversy, it is quite clear that it really makes no more sense to bend your mind into a phony dream state at whatever risk than it does to stun it into insensibility with alcohol. Arguments pro and con effect the facts hardly at all.

(Dr. Welch is a practising physician and an associate professor of clinical medicine).

Oriental Delicacies With Basic Soybean

MOTHER EARTH NEWS

The common soybean — if there is such a thing, considering the number of present varieties — needs no introduction. Everyone knows the useful crop that feeds our livestock and yields an oil which is utilized in a wide range of chemical processes.

Not everyone, though, appreciates the taste of plain boiled soybeans. While many cookbooks offer recipes to make this food palatable, it's difficult if not impossible to find directions for the various bean products made and used in the Far East.

It's true that some of the traditional Eastern methods take a great deal of time and a certain amount of labor, but the procedures are less complicated than many people think. Only a few basics are needed to make such foods at home: a substantial number of soybeans, a few common kitchen utensils, plenty of patience (especially that!) and a taste for these unique Oriental delicacies.

Let's start with the soy sauce recipe, the most complex of all. At the turn of the century, Koreans made soy sauce in the fall after the harvesting of the dried soybeans. These were first thoroughly cooked by boiling and then, while hot and wet, immediately pounded in a mortar to a fine mash.

The pulp was placed in the centre of a large wooden bowl and formed by hand into a truncated cone measuring eight or 10 inches high by one foot in diameter. This object, called mei-ju, was placed on a mat of rice straw in a special chamber known as the "paper floor room".

Here the cones dried to a fairly hard consistency, and each was then wrapped in two bunches of rice straw — crossed at the top — and hung from the ceiling of the same room for several weeks while fermentation got under way. Once the process was well begun, each mei-ju was taken down and stored in a large bag over the winter (in a warm room but away from the fire).

Come spring, the Korean woman broke the cones into several pieces and put the chunks into a large earthenware jar. This vessel was filled with water to which the cook added a given quantity of salt, a number of whole red peppers (capsicums) and a few lumps of charcoal.

The pot was then set in the sun for several days while the contents ripened further. During this period the water blackened and pieces of moldy soybean cone came to the top. Finally, the liquid in the jar was carefully ladled out and boiled, with the scum (coagulated protein) being removed as the cooking proceeded. When sufficiently concentrated, the sauce was cooled and stored.

This operation is primitive but effective. Today you can make use of a few alterations — not in method but technique.

(1) First, it's hard work pounding enough soybeans into mash to make cones for a large amount of soy sauce. Run the beans through a hand-operated meat grinder with extremely fine cutters. All the juice should be retained along with the pulp; any excess liquid will leach out of the cone during its initial rest on the matting.

(2) Substitutes for rice straw mats can be made from cattail leaves, or the drying cones can simply be set upon screen-wire frames (either old window screens or fruit-drying racks) covered with white towels.

(3) Strips of unbleached muslin two feet long by six or eight inches wide will serve to hang the dried cones. The cloth ties should be laid on a table in the shape of a cross and the mass of beans centred on the conjunction. The ends of each strip are knotted together and the package is hung by an open eye hook screwed into a rafter of, say a warm smokehouse.

The cones can later be packd in an unbleached muslin or cotton bag and suspended in any warm room or building over the winter (This form of storage prevents damage by mice or insects).

(4) Finally, the seasoning: If you have no hankering for red peppers, leave them out. Add salt to suit your taste, of course, and don't forget the all-important charcoal — a substance well known for its ability to absorb impurities in liquids and gases. Use the activated form found at chemical supply houses or at outlets for water treatment products. Also, a hint of garlic added to the boiling liquid contributes immeasurably to the final result.

OK, you've got your homebrew soy sauce cooled and bottled. Now, you say, it's time to get rid of that black mess in the bottom of the earthenware jar. Don't! That dubious-looking sludge is the basis of another valuable Korean food called toin-chang (soybean mash).

Westerners can prepare it by simply dehydrating the residue on pizza pans or cookie sheets, either in the sun or in an oven set at 100 deg. F. This condiment is unsurpassed in Oriental dishes, and can also be sprinkled over cool summer salads, added to their dressing or included in soups and stews for an unusual, zesty flavor.

In the Orient, the soybean has many other uses. One well-known example is the Japanese tofu, or bean curd. Tu-bu, the Korean equivalent, is made in the following manner:

A quantity of soybeans (two to four cups, depending on how much bean curds desired) is soaked overnight and cooked thoroughly in the same water. The legumes can then be ground or pounded as described above, but a large amount of water must be worked in. The resulting liquid is strained through a cloth, preferably unbleached muslin.

Koreans thicken tu-bu with a special agent derived from sea water, but a good substitute is rennet added to the juice in the proportion of one tablet (soaked in warm water) to one quart of liquid. The fluid is then poured off and the remaining bean curd — the curdled protein — is pressed into very tender, soft cakes.

In Korea, this food is usually added to soups or stews, or cooked into omelettes along with the eggs. An interesting dish called tu-bu-cho-rim is made by cooking the bean curd in soy sauce for a short time serving it with sesame-oil, pepper and onions. Delicious! Or you can simply dip your tu-bu into soy sauce and eat it with no further preparation.

Kong-cha-ban, another Korean dish, consists of soybeans boiled in soy sauce. They don't swell as when cooked in plain water, but become hard and brittle and very salty in flavor. Sugar and sesame oil are added at serving tme.

One more interesting condiment used in Korean cooking is akin to our roasted soybeans but is prepared without presoaking. The cook merely burns the hard, dry beans in the bottom of an iron pot, as if parching grain or flour, but at a more extreme temperature. The heat causes the beans to jump like popcorn.

When done — and this is a matter of taste and experience — the blackened morsels are removed and ground into coarse powder. The finer, flour-like material is sieved out and used to flavor rice cakes or top plain rice, and the remaining crunchy bits are relished by children.

You'll find that yu can make desired quantities of any of the foods and condiments described above on the basis of your own preferences. And none requires complicated equipment or processing. The bean, once activated by cooking, will pretty well take care of the necessary chemical changes with a minimum o interference from the cook.

Leftovers needn't be wasted, or even buried in the garden or compost heap or fed to the livestock. Instead, they can be reheated, mixed with more well-cooked beans and made into soy-producing cones.

Canada's forests, which cover nearly half the country's total area, contribute more than $3 billion worth of products to our export income.

The four-page fact sheet Forestry and The Environment points out that although a healthy forest industry is essential for Canada's economy, our woods must also be preserved as a place for recreation.

Each year insects kill about 250,000 acres of forests. In addition, every year some $35 million worth of wood is destroyed by fires. About 75 per cent of all forest fires are caused by negligence of people. The spruce budworm is one of the many insects that plague Canada's forests. It is one of the worst offenders and every year destroys thousands of acres of timber.

The four-page fact sheet Spruce Budworm explains that the budworm causes most damage in New Brunswick, Quebec, Ontario and British Columbia. The folder also describes the life cycle of the budworm and states that chemical spraying is still the only effective control method.

The Canadian Forestry Service is also at present testing several viruses and their effect on the budworm.

You will also learn how to protect your trees if you own a small woodlot, a home or cottage in a budworm area.

Cigarette Ad Withdrawal Small Women's Victory

TORONTO (CP) — A recent withdrawal of a cigarette advertisement after women complained that it was sexist seems a small victory in the battle to change the portrayal of women in advertising.

The ad featured two workers in a manhole peering up at shapely legs on a female passerby and read: "Like Benson and Hedges . . . the longer the better."

The Vancouver Status of Women Council organized a letter-writing campaign which was successful in stopping the ad.

Sharon Gibson, research assistant to the Ontario advisory council on the status of women, said many women around the province are angry about the way they are depicted by the media.

"Our monitors have found nearly 100 advertisers in magazines still using the woman in stereotyped roles of housewife, nag, dumbell or sex object," she said.

The advertising industry has analysed, scrutinized and psychologically disseeted the female — the bolder and the wielder of the purchasing power.

As well, a report by the department of labor indicated that five of every eight women more than 15 years of age are home-makers and the majority of women who work consider their employment as a job, not a career.

Sociologist Helen Levine noted the advertisers realize that most women are at home or are not in glamorous jobs.

"If I were at home staring at the four walls — chances are, I'd go out shopping," she added.

Although precise statistics on women's expenditures are difficult to find, the National Organization of Women in New York stated that the woman accounts for 85 per cent of the retail market in the United States.

DATING SERVICE ON THE SCREEN

NEW YORK (AP) — Singles turned off by the singles scene are turning on to a new video dating service that first lets them see, hear and select their datese via television.

"It's the end of the blind date," proclaims Videomate, New York's only video dating service that provides the latest electronic refinement in the age-od game of boy-meets-girl.

"Now, you can see and hear your date on closed-circuit TV before you date," says a Videomate advertisement. "It's fun! It's riskless! It's new!"

Instead of making stilted chatter over costly drinks in a crowded bar, Videomate members pay $60 to tell a camera and microphone about themselves and their romantic ideals.

They view tapes of other "Videomates" who in turn look at their tapes. If it is mutually agreeable, they get together.

"Video dating cuts out a lot of the baloney in getting to know people," says Jim Wilson, 27.

Wilson, 27, a free-lance photographer and antique dealer, went to Videomate and met Janie King, 24, a secretary and soprano.

She said: "I'm very picky about the men I go out with. And video dating helps because it's like window shopping — you can look but you don't have to buy."

Les Paul Goes Back on the Road Again

By RICH WISEMAN
RANDOM NOTES

ROLLING STONE

LES PAUL, the man who invented the solid-body electric guitar and then used it to help sell more than 20 million records with then-wife Mary Ford in the '50s, has hit the road again. Backed by 15-year-old son Billy on drums ("I've got $200,000 worth of guitars and he's got to beat those goddamn things!) and another brainchild, the "Les Paulverizer," the 59-year-old pioneer won a standing ovation from the young crowd at San Francisco's Great American Music Hall. The Paulverizer is a tape system he operates by turning dials on a little black box that's attached to his guitar. During the show, he "recalled" rhythm guitar, bass and percussion tracks — even the voice of old pal Bing Crosby on "It's Been a Long, Long Time" — while he played some sizzling lead guitar. Asked about his plans for the Paulverizer, Paul laughed. "I laid it on Gibson 25 years ago, and they weren't ready — and I don't know if they are now!" He will lay it on audiences himself in the upcoming months, his busiest concert schedule in 10 years. "I sit in my room and ask, 'What the hell am I doing here?'" he said. "As long as the people like my playing, I'll play — as long as I don't have to hear it back." A tour with Mahavishnu John McLaughlin and Jeff Beck, two of the many rock guitarists who play Paul's Gibson model, is in the talking stages. Said Les: "It sounds like a fun deal — these guys are killers."

ALICE COOPER appeared at a New York park August 12th to inaugurate his Department of Youth Clean-up Campaign. After arriving in a black chauffeur-driven garbage truck, Alice helped the 200 "Cooper Troopers" load garbage sacks (there wasn't much to load since the city had just cleaned the park.) Then he distributed his latest single, which just happens to be called "Department of Youth" . . . A bit of publicity Alice could do without was the news that his new $350,000 Beverly Hills-area home burned down to the ground the next morning — the day he was supposed to move in. A million dollars worth of possessions went up in smoke, including a bed that Groucho Marx had given him, paintings by Salvador Dali, Norman Rockwell and comedian Jonathan Winters, and an original "Gone With the Wind" poster. Only one and a half years ago, Cooper's Greenwich, Conn, mansion burned down, just after he moved out. Both blazes were blamed on faulty wiring. Alice, who's now on a European tour with his Welcome to My Nightmare show, plans to rebuild.

SHORTS: Elusive Sly Stone is featured on a cut from the new New Riders of the Purple Sage album. Producer Bob Johnston (Bob Dylan, Johnny Cash) corralled Sly for piano, organ and vocal parts, after the St. Beulah's Church choir — featuring Sly's mother — agreed to add their voices on the cut, a gospel number called "Mighty Time." . . . Steve Miller resurfaced for his first U.S. appearance this year at the August 21st opening of a Berkeley club called West Dakota. Miller, whose lawyer, Richard Hodge, owns the club, jammed for more than two hours with Boz Scaggs, Lonnie Turner and Tim Davis, all original Blues Band members. John Cipollina, Stu Cook and Les Dudek, ex-members of Quicksilver, Creedence Clearwater Revivial and the Boz Scaggs Band respectively, joined in too. Dudek has cut his own album for Columbia (Scaggs producing) and Cipollina is recording tracks at Wally Heider's in S.F. . . . Look for a Captain Beefheart-Frank Zappa live album, to be released in early fall. The songs (among them "200 Years Old" and "Muffin Man") were recorded in various locations in the past two years. Title: "Bongo Fury" . . . Michelle Phillips, formerly of the Mamas and Papas, is now recording for A and M. She's Warren Beatty's current companion . . . Steve Goodman has written a country parody called "You Never Even Called Me by My Name" which, in one four-line verse, boasts the quintessential C and W words: mother, prison, farm, pickup truck and train. David Allen Coe has recorded the song, and it's now on the country charts.

Led Zeppelin lead singer Robert Plant and his two children have been released from the London hospital they were taken to followng a car accident on the Greek island of Rhodes, August 4th. Plant's wife is still in the hospital, suffering from fractures of the pelvis. Plant had sustained a broken elbow and ankle in the accident.

UNDER HIS SKIN: Briton David New is a fan of Don McLean. He had the cover of McLean's "Playin' Favorites" album tattoed on his back and he quit his job as a construction worker to accompany Don on a recent tour there. As we said, he is a fan. His preoccupation with McLean has even led to the dissolution of his marriage. "My wife got fed up with me playing his records all the time," New said, but he didn't seem too upset. He plans soon to leave his Uxbridge flat — strewn with McLean memorabilia — to watch his idol perform in the United States.

Booze Ad Ban Urged

WINNIPEG (CP) — Premier Ed Schreyer has written to Health Minister Marc Lalonde, urging a ban on the advertising of all alcoholic beverages except "legitimate wines and cider products."

The premier expressed concern about "the disturbing extent to which the promotion and consumption of alcoholic beverages has developed from the time of prohibition to the present."

He said the results of alcohol abuse "constitute our No. 1 national social problem" and too much of advertising portrays drinking as innocent, natural and socially necessary.

Schreyer said an advertising ban "should not necessarily interfere with the availability of alcoholic beverages to the general public at and above the age of majority."

He urged Lalonde to contact provincial governments and seek a consensus "favoring the abolition of advertising of alcoholic beverages in the electronic, print and other media."

Schreyer, whose letter was made public by Manitoba Liquor Control Commission chairman J. Frank Syms, said Canada's quality of life is endangered by alcohol abuse.

The Bridge Expert

By FRED KARPIN

During each of the years gone by since contract bridge was invented in 1927, there has always been a "best-played hand of the year." More often than not, the particular best-played hand selected has featured some highly intricate play, such as the triple squeeze, the scissors coup, etc.

In, my opinion, the best-played hand of any year is the one presented below. Actually, it is a simple hand, in retrospect. It was acclaimed by all bridge experts as the best-played hand of 1945. The hero of the deal was Howard Schenken, of New York.

Both sides vulnerable. North-South has a part-score of 60. East deals.

The bidding:

East	South	West	North
1 ♠	1 NT	2 ♦	Pass
Pass	2 NT	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Six of ♦.

East put up the diamond jack on the opening lead, and South won the trick with his queen. To fulfill the contract, South had to make four spade tricks, for there was no other place in which he could create even one more trick.

But it was obvious that East, who had opened with a one-spade bid, had all four of the missing spades. When South led a spade, West would fail to follow suit, and the situation would be revealed to East. East would then decline to take his ace until the fourth spade lead, and declarer could never get to dummy to cash the fifth spade. Schenken, however, found the winning play without even hesitating. He led back a low diamond at trick two!

West won this lead and returned a third diamond, to establish the suit. On this trick East had to make a discard; and, as Schenken had foreseen, East discarded what seemed to him to be the most worthless card in his hand — the deuce of spades.

It now became a routine matter for declarer to bring home four spade tricks. He next led the king and queen of spades, after which he led a third spade, East being compelled to take the ace. South's remaining spade then served as an entry to dummy, enabling South to make four spade tricks.

The East player, Sam Fry Jr., made the statement at the conclusion of the deal: "Although I was 6,500 points behind, I actually enjoyed the hand. It's a pleasure to be fooled by such a magnificent deceptive play."

YOUR HOROSCOPE

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST
Wednesday, Sept. 10

By SYDNEY OMARR

ARIES (March 21-April 19): High-frequency cycle ahead. You feel you are in a position of power. Many pressures removed. Basic judgment accurate. You know what to do and the right time to do it. You feel more secure at home. Bright contact with Capricorn.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Get an early start. Display energy, enthusiasm. One in a position to make life more comfortable is taking note. Personal appeal lures opposite sex. Offer ideas in a way which reflects individuality. Settle differences with Libra.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Get away, inasmuch as a feeling of restriction or confinement tends to dominate. Virgo could play an active role. One who cares shies from expressing feelings. Be gregarious. Let others see you at your flirtatious best.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Accent is on how you attain basic goal, career and ambition. Broaden horizons. Current opportunity greater than might be readily discernible. A time to go forward. Let go of things which stand in the way of greater happiness. Contact a Leo.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Your mind may be quite inspired and keen, if you let emotional warmth and initiative dynamize it. Beware of a glamorous scheme in terms of money an investments. Don't follow any social line which would control your ideals and endeavors.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Good fortune must be attracted as a needle to the magnet. Don't sit back and wait for it to fall in your lap. Seize every chance, big or little, as it shows up. Pay a visit to an under-the-weather friend. Social life is lively.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Stubborness may be regretted later. Do the best you can rather than yearn for the impossible. Say or do nothing which could be considered antagonistic. A calm attitude is essential to mental peace and physical well being. Talk things over with Scorpio.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Work on something of practical value. Gain an unexpected advantage by using a skill which has been neglected. Ask for help if you need it, rather than carry an extra burden alone. More gained through persuasive methods than aggressive action.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Give attention to financial security. Take steps required to make it more certain. Apply enthusiasm to greater accomplishments in your work. What you say or do now can have a vital effect in a meaningful relationship. Think of love.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Follow procedures which have proved effective. Diplomacy needed for harmony at home. Self-control essential to overcome desire to be extravagant. Devote time to business correspondence. Concentrate on a hobby which provides relaxation.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Be content with status quo, socially or emotionally. Don't attempt to play prima donna or dictator. Tantrums or caprice would not be tolerated. Avoid changing jobs for something seemingly more profitable. A hurried decision brings regret.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You may not feel as free as a soaring eagle — but you will be admired for efforts. Don't expect free-and-easy access. There are restrictions. Yet, an older person is willing to provide you with necessary material. Gemini has useful answers.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY it's up to you whether your year ahead is to be a bed of roses or one containing more thorns. Put your shoulder to the wheel if this is what is necessary to propel you to a desireable goal — or be sufficiently sensible to relinquish an irksome responsibility.

GARDENING

Vegetables Can Be Interesting

The vegetable garden is just as interesting to the observant gardener as are woods, beaches, streams, or mountain slopes. When we take time for a leisurely stroll we see many things to think about, and we can learn some lessons to use to our advantage.

During the recent period of overcast skies, showers, at least one heavy rainfall, and temperatures below normal for the time of year, we could not fail to note the change in growth as we studied our plants.

Previously, under a full quota of sunshine each day and low relative humidity, the leafy vegetables made slow growth and lacked the normal depth of green coloring.

As soon as skies became cloudy, the color deepened and growth returned to normal. Does this indicate we are trying to grow our spinach and Swiss chard too much in the open, and that is why we have to use so much nitrogen fertilizer? We already have reports that high nitrogen in spinach has caused sickness among children.

It would be interesting next year to sow some in full sun, some in morning sun and dappled afternoon shade, and some shaded in the morning but open to afternoon and evening sun, and note the results.

The next thing we notice is that root vegetables are not developing as fast as they did during the sunny days. Carrots, for example, slowed down to a rate of growth comparable to the earliest sowings in a cool spring. This agrees with the dictum "root vegetables should always be planted in full sun".

Tomatoes have proved interesting to watch. Of the many green fruits showing flecks of yellow during the last of the sunny days, only those low down and almost completely hidden with leaves and other fruits have developed the characteristic red or golden color that indicates further ripening.

The fact that those fruits which showed progressive ripening during the period of dull days were on the inside of a cluster of fruits and well sheltered by foliage (that is, low down and near the centre of the plants) suggests benefits from the protection afforded, and possibly the absorbtion of heat from their benefactors.

The most significant change we observe is among the squash and marrows. It has been known by generations of gardeners that the biggest set of fruit early in the season is on plants grown from seed that is three years old, and that the curcurbits in general do best in partial shade. For the latter reason pumpkins were always grown among the corn.

Those of us who found it necessary to replenish our supply with seeds from last year's crop have been annoyed at the sunny weeks that passed with plenty of male flowers and very few fruits.

After a few days of cloudy weather all that changed, and the plants were ablaze with golden blooms, nearly all female, and now have a quantity of developing fruits. Maybe we should take more seriously the advice to grow these plants in the shade. At least we could do some experimenting.

Just over a century ago, Henry David Thoreau wrote that "the gentle rains that prevent me from hoeing my beans are good for them', and while it rained he sat in the shelter of his doorway contemplating the wonders of nature.

"I grew in those seasons like corn in the night, and they were far better than any work of the hands would have been. They were not time subtracted from my life, but so much over and above my usual allowance."

An hour spent in contemplation and observation is just as important to a gardener today as it was in the last century, and the lessons learned are sometimes more rewarding than "work with the hands."

The Real D. B. Cooper Please Stand Up . . .

WASHINGTON (WP) — The FBI is investigating whether a suburban Virginia heavy equipment operator named Jerry A. Cooper is really D. B. Cooper, the airline hijacker who parachuted with $200,000 ransom money from a Northwest Orient 727 jet on Thanksgiving eve, 1971, and was never seen again.

Acting on an anonymous tip, the FBI has questioned Jerry Cooper's sister-in-law, Carol Wood, manager of the Oakton Park Apartments in Fairfax City, Va., who later told her brother-in-law that the FBI suspected him of being the skyjacker.

Jerry Cooper, 30, then called The Washington Post and met voluntarily with the FBI Monday in efforts to deny that he had anything to do with the crime, even though he is an experienced skydiver and strongly resembles witnesses' descriptions of skyjacker D. B. Cooper.

Both Coopers are about six feet talk weigh about 180 pounds and have dark hair and dark complexions. After looking at an artist's sketch of missing skyjacker, Jerry Cooper said Monday, "I do look an awful lot like him. It's kind of scary."

Cooper acknowledged that he was a skydiver for eight years before quitting about five years ago. He also said that he once worked as an aircraft fueler and therefore was familiar with the operations of commercial jets.

But he insisted the FBI was investigating the wrong man. "My name is Jerry. I have a birth certificate," Cooper said. "If I was going to hijack a plane, I certainly wouldn't use my real name.

"All I need is for them (the FBI) to show pictures to people that were on the flight and say, 'Yeah, that's him, that's him.'"

Cooper said he contacted the Post and the FBI because he couldn't sleep since hearing from his sister-in-law about the FBI's inquiry. "I was shocked' that's really the word for it," he said. "If they're going to look me up, I feel everybody should know about it."

Cooper said, and the FBI confirmed, that the FBI received an anonymous tip last May from a caller who said he was afraid of Cooper, that Cooper was a dangerou person, that he had seen about $15,000 in cash in Cooper's apartment and that he believed Cooper was the skyjacker.

"If I had $15,000 I'd be out fishing somewhere," Jerry Cooper said as he lit his third cigarette within 20 minutes. When told that hijacker D. B. Cooper was allegedly a chainsmoker, he said, "Oh, no."

Cooper said he doesn't know who could have called authorities. "I probably have a few enemies," he added, explaining that he had been involved in a number of brawls and had been arrested for disorderly conduct several times in Fairfax County.

Cooper, who said he hunts in Virginia every year around Thanksgiving, said he is not sure where he was at the time of the skyjacking. "I was probably hunting. How many men do you know can say where they were four years ago?"

Mrs. Wood also said Cooper was probably hunting with relatives who have shot game that time of the year for 14 years.

When the FBI agent first questioned her, Mrs. Wood said, "I laughed and laughed. I couldn't control myself. It was that funny." After more questioning, however, Mrs. Wood said, "I got super scared. My brother-in-law is a super mind of a guy. He's an Aquarian. He was born under a rainbow. He's definitely no criminal."

Within 72 hours of the hijacker's exploits, D. B. Cooper tee shirts bearing a picture of a suitcase marked "$" parachuting down from the plane with the legend, "D. B. Cooper, where are you?" were marketed by a Portland, Ore., manufacturer.

A song about the hijacker was written, recorded and released within a week and became a favorite of Oregon and Washington state top-40 listeners. Later, bumper stickers appeared, asking "Will the real D. B. Cooper please stand up?"

NIXON LAUDS DIEF

OTTAWA (CP) — Former prime minister John Diefenbaker, getting ready to celebrate his 80th birthday, has received a glowing tribute from former United States president Richard Nixon.

The Canadian Council of Christians and Jews, sponsor of a party here Sept. 17, had invited Nixon attend. The former president said he couldn't, but he enclosed a letter to be passed on to Diefenbaker.

". . . of the many world leaders I have met over the past 25 years, I have always considered you as one of the most outstanding of all. I am sure that your political opponents, as well as your political supporters, would agree with this evaluation. You were and are a man of high principle, and you have, in great abundance, that quality which is indispensable to outstanding leadership — courage and conviction — or, putting it in the American vernacular, 'guts galore'."

Nixon sent the organizers a cheque for $20 to buy two tickets "for a couple who otherwise might not be able to afford to come."

Organizers say tickets are being bought by members of all political parties, including many cabinet ministers, and orders are coming in from all parts of the country.

Dream Girl Number Eight

HONG KONG — Actor Mickey Rooney said today he has "found the girl of my dreams" and will make her his eighth wife later this year.

Rooney, in Hong Kong to begin work on a new film, said his bride-to-be was Jan Chamberlain, a 25-year-old American singer-composer.

"At long last I've found the girl of my dreams," Rooney said as he relaxed in his hotel suite with Chamberlain. "I've got a bad case of the flu, but love can conquer anything."

"I don't believe in marriage myself, because it wrecks a good relationship between people who truly love each other," said Miss Chamberlain.

OAKLAND, Calif. — Susan Atkins, a member of the Charles Manson "family", says she is sorry for participating in the slayings of actress Sharon Tate and six others in 1969 and denounced Manson himself.

Atkins, in a television interview conducted from her prison cell and broadcast today, said: "Sorry is such a pitiful word for what I feel about those people who lost their lives because of me and my willingness to participate. It is not an adequate word."

Atkins called Manson, who is serving a life sentence for the slayings, a "deceived" and "pitiable" man. I think he is in darkness," she said in an interview with Oakland television station KTVU.

LONDON — Dr. John Sykes, 46, correctly filled in all 124 words completing four London Times crossword puzzles in a total of 36 minutes Sunday, winning his fourth consecutive national cross-word championship. Afterward he announced he would not enter next year to give someone else a chance.

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. — Dominic Byrne stayed behind bars Monday, despite a claim that he offered kidnapped whisky heir Samuel Bronfman 2nd his freedom in advance of a $2.3-million ransom payment.

"He offered Mr. Bronfman his freedom several days before the ransom was paid," defence lawyer Peter DeBlasio argued, "but for reasons of his own, which will be brought out later, Mr. Bonfman declined."

MEN WHO LOVED CAT'S DANCING

COCOA BEACH, Fla. (UPI) — The skipper of the nuclear attack submarine USS Finback has been relieved of his command because of a topless performance by a go-go dancer aboard the sub last July, it was reported today.

The navy confirmed that Cmdr. Connelly D. Stevenson was relieved of his command Aug. 1, but would not comment on any incidents involving a go-go dancer.

Sources close to Stevenson told Cocoa Today newspaper and the Washington Post today that the submarine commander was relieved of the command when navy officials learned that 23-year-old Cat Futch danced topless for the 121 crewman on the deck of the sub last July 10.

"It really boosted the men's morale," Futch said. "It didn't hurt them or me.

CIA Poison Found

NEW YORK (Reuter) — Two containers of a mass poison developed by the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) have been found in a Maryland warehouse, the New York Times says.

The paper reported today that the poison had been ordered destroyed by then president Richard Nixon in November, 1969, as part of a program to limit chemical-biological warfare production.

But, the paper says, a middle-level CIA employee preserved the two containers, said to be capable of killing the population of a small city.

The Times says the Senate intelligence committee has judged the matter to be of such importance that it has scheduled public hearings next week to examine why procedures for handling such matters were so lax.

INCREASE HIGHEST IN CANADA

B.C. Jobless Hits 9.2%

OTTAWA (CP) — Unemployment in B.C. rose 1.3 per cent in August bringing the jobless toll to 9.2 per cent or 104,000 persons. The B.C. increase was the highest in Canada and showed a jump of 34,000 unemployed from August, 1974.

Statistics Canada reported today the national unemployment rate increased by one-tenth of one per cent in August, maintaining for the sixth straight month the worst jobless rate in 14 years.

The August rate was 7.3 per cent. The rate had remained at 7.2 per cent for the previous five months, except for May when it dipped to 7.1 per cent.

This is the worst rate since 1961, when it stayed above seven per cent for 13 months before dropping to 6.8 per cent in August of that year.

The August jobless rate declined this year in three provinces. Ontario was down one-tenth of one per cent to 6.2 and Alberta dropped three-tenths of one per cent to 4.1 per cent. The Saskatchewan rate dropped two-tenths of one per cent to 2.7 giving that province the lowest rate in the country.

The rate increased in all other provinces. Newfoundland continued to have the highest rate at 21 per cent, up 1.1 per cent from July.

Nationally, there were fewer jobs available in August than in July and the number of people seeking work did not drop at the same rate, leading to higher unemployment. The statistics are adjusted for seasonal variations, which economists regard as a more accurate measure.

On an actual basis, 623,000 were officially unemployed in August.

Student unemployment dropped to 4.8 per cent in August from 8.1 per cent in July — consistent with the annual pattern — although the rate remained higher than the last two years. Student unemployment was 3.7 per cent for August in both 1973 and 1974.

On a seasonally-adjusted basis, unemployment increased for all age groups. The jobless rate for those 24 and younger increased four-tenths of one per cent to 12.7 and the rate for those 25 and older jumped one-tenth of one per cent to 5.4 per cent.

Male unemployment increased two-tenths of one per cent to 7.7 per cent, while the jobless rate for women re-

CRIME WORST IN THE WEST

TORONTO (CP)—A British Columbia criminologist said Monday that people face an increasing risk of falling victim to violent crime the closer they get to Canada's West Coast.

Prof. Ezzat Pattah said some provinces tend to be more violence prone than others.

"The study of trends and patterns of violent criminal activity in Canada shows that violent offences tend to increase as we move from the east to the west of the country with only a very few exceptions," he said. Fattah is director of the criminology department Simon Fraser University in Burnaby.

Figures published by Statistics Canada in a national crime report this year support such an east-to-west pattern.

The report said that for the first quarter of 1975, Newfoundland had 94 crimes of violence for each 100,000 population.

Prince Edward Island had 61, Nova Scotia 95, New Brunswick, 80, Quebec, 81, Ontario, 128, Manitoba, 115, Saskatchewan, 159, Alberta, 179, and British Columbia 193.

Newfoundland's rape rate per 100,000 citizens was .74 while British Columbia's was 2.55.

Upended Volkswagen . . . sign of Boston violence

Lynch-Law Sentiments Surface in Boston

By PAUL WHITELAW
Special to The Times

BOSTON, Mass. — "Let us at 'em, we'll give 'em a fair trial, we'll tie 'em to a tree."

The judgy, middle-aged white woman shouted her epithet to a crowd of several hundred sympathetic onlookers and riot-equipped policemen from the steps of the ramshackle district courthouse of South Boston. Inside, 74 whites and blacks arrested Monday as they attempted to demonstrate support of school desegregation in this city were being arraigned on charges of distrubing the peace.

Moments later police moved in. They closed off traffic along the street in front of the courthouse, dispersing the crowd so authorities could safely evacuate the demonstrators to a less volatile area of the city, where they were released.

Sections of this city looked as though they were under military occupation as 2,600 local policemen, state troopers, federal marshals and FBI agents patrolled the streets and guarded schools.

Authorities told reporters Monday night that they were pleased the first day of school — and attempts to desegregate classes by busing children between white and black neighborhoods — were marked by relatively few violent incidents.

In addition to the pro-busing demonstrators arraigned in South Boston court, only about a dozen other people — opponents of federal-enforced integration — were arrested.

But assistant district attorney John Caffney didn't mince words as he told reporters the first day of school was no more than a volatile crease-fire in this troubled city.

"If it weren't for the fact these people would have been slaughtered," he said, referring to pro-busing demonstrators.

The busing of thousands of pupils here and in Louisville, Ky., went off without major incident today.

Yellow school buses escorted by motorcycle policemen quietly carried pupils to classes in Boston, where attendance today appeared to be higher than on Monday, when absenteeism touched the 40 per cent mark.

Mail Strike . . . Dates Vary

OTTAWA (CP) — Possible dates for the beginning of a legal strike by the country's 22,000 inside postal workers vary from early next week to the middle of October.

But if there is to be a strike, past practice indicates it will probably not come before two or three weeks elapse.

If a strike occurs, it will follow the failure of conciliation efforts to resolve the lengthy contract dispute between the government and the Canadian Union of Postal Workers. Postmaster-General Bryce Mackasey said Monday he hopes a walkout can be avoided.

But Mackasey said he would be prepared in the event of a national postal strike to shut down the post office for two or three months.

In a speech to officials of the paper envelope industry, Mackasey said there might be a long strike if the union sticks to its demands for a 71-per-cent pay increase over one year and a 30-hour work-week.

Under the federal Public Service Staff Relations Act, which applies to the postal workers, a strike cannot start legally until seven days after a conciliation report is delivered to the chairman of the public service staff relations board. The board is a quasi-judicial federal agency that deals with government-employee disputes.

As conciliation efforts were to end today, union spokesmen have contended that a strike can begin as early as Sept. 16.

But the realities of collective bargaining with the federal government likely will set the strike date back several days or even weeks.

Mackasey has said there is not likely to be a legal strike, if one does occur, within a month.

The process is as follows:

Judge Jean Moisan of the Quebec Superior Court, the conciliation chairman, will prepare a report after the conciliation talks conclude. His report may be lengthy, dealing with several complex issues such as wage demands, technological change and fringe benefits, which have not yet been dealt with in negotiations.

After his report is prepared, Irving Gaul and Guy Dancrosse, the union and government appointees to the conciliation board, will add their remarks or perhaps prepare separate reports.

Then the reports must be translated to fulfil requirements of the official languages' policy.

The seven-days rule will apply after preparation, transportation and delivery of reports—a process that might set the legal strike date back to October.

IWA Rams Pulp Pickets

FORT ST. JAMES — International Woodworkers of America members pushed through a pulp union picket line here Monday and the line was withdrawn today as the pulp union waits for reaction from the IWA head office.

Haworth said the union was still waiting for a reaction from the IWA and until then the picket line was withdrawn.

"We also contacted the local IWA executive, but they are also waiting to hear from headquarters. I don't think that the action was in any way planned by the executive," said Haworth.

An IWA spokesman in Vancouver said as yet there was no reaction from union leaders.

Prince George PPWC president Len Shankel said about 60 IWA members Monday stormed through a PPWC picket line, tearing up picket signs. The PPWC had set up the line in front of the Takla Forest Products mill in Fort St. James employing IWA members.

"The crossing of the picket lines by IWA members makes it simple," Shankel said Monday. "They have joined the employers' battle against the employees."

Haworth said another picket line was set up this morning at a sawmill in Prince George, but IWA members did not cross.

Meanwhile in Vancouver Art Gruntman, western regional vice-president of the Canadian Paperworkers Union, says the union will expand activities against Weldwood of Canada, the last of the nine major integrated forest Companies that has been shutting down all Weldwood operations in the Greater Vancouver area during the next few days.

Pulp workers have been on strike since July 16.

Harassment By Police Called Off

MONTREAL (CP) — Montreal police will call off their pressure tactics Wednesday and seek new ways to speed up settlement of a dispute with the city involving better working conditions in a 1975 contract, a police spokesman said today.

Earlier today, policemen stopped some large trucks going in and out of the Olympics construction site for spot checks. No traffic disruptions were reported in other areas of the city as had been the case Monday.

Angry motorists were delayed up to two hours during Monday night's peak traffic period as police tried to force a contract settlement by using harassment tactics.

They stopped drivers at key thoroughfares to check car registrations and automobile trunks.

Quebec Provincial Police (QPP) officers were on standby.

Charles Brunet, vice-president of the brotherhood, said Gilbert Custeau, president, met with Premier Robert Bourassa Monday and received assurances the premier would do all he could to settle the conflict.

Brunet said the only problems to be solved involved working conditions.

Paris Defies Greenpeace Pay Order

VANCOUVER (CP) — The French government has decied to defy its own courts and will not pay stage one of a settlement ordered in the Greenpeace III ramming case, a Greenpeace spokesman said Monday.

Dave McTaggart, captain of the anti-nuclear testing mission, said in an interview from Paris that the only recourse he has to enforce the order is public opinion or pressure from the Canadian government.

The court ordered the government to pay 2,000 francs (about $500) for a damage survey of the Greenpeace vessel and then to pay the amount of damages determined by the survey, McTaggart said.

McTaggart said his lawyer, Thierry Garby-Lacrouts contacted the government lawyer, Jean Gallot, Monday and was told: "'No', we're not paying.'"

McTaggart said Garby-Lacrouts advised him that he has no legal recourse if the government simply chooses to defy the court order.

Beryl Repeats Plea

OTTAWA (CP) — Beryl Plumptre, chairman of the federal food prices review board, has renewed a call for direct intervention by the British Columbia government in an industrial dispute that has closed Vancouver-area supermarkets.

In a telegram to Premier Dave Barrett Tuesday, she said the board is "disappointed" by the reaction of the B.C. government to a call by the board for intervention last week.

"No useful reaction has yet been heard from either you or the minister of consumer services who, one might have thought, would have been particularly eager to demonstrate some concern on behalf of the B.C. consumer," the telegram says.

Plumptre said the negotiations will have a far-reaching effect on negotiations in other industries, both in B.C. and in other provinces.

"If you maintain a 'hands-off policy' there will almost certainly be an excessively high settlement," she said. She offered to discuss the dispute with Barrett by telephone or in person.

Law Divorced from Reality, UN Told

GENEVA (AP) — Existing legal systems in the western world tend to be divorced from reality and are powerless when confronted by the international criminal, says a committee of the United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime.

The committee's report, to be considered at a plenary session later this week, was published Monday. It referred to such general problems as over-burdened courts, inadequacies in law systems, overloaded prisons and the difficulties of dealing with professional criminals.

The committtee suggests that criminals seem more capable than police of gaining advantages through technical progress and the question arises "whether it was not necessary to rethink the whole basis of criminal policy and justice."

The report says that, in most countries there are distortions between the requirements of the law and the needs of the people. It says "It must be concluded that most judicial systems are biased" since the underprivileged classes are unquestionably over-represented among the people proseeuted.

In many countries, the report maintains, people no longer have confidence in a justice they consider either too indulgent or too severe.

"Justice seems unrelated to social reality; its notions, criteria, setting and speech are alien to real life. There is a certain social schrizophrenia on criminal justice. Divorced from reality, criminal justice no longer guarantees the safety of citizens and often seems uninterested in certain socially harmful situations."

Criminal law is attacked in the report as an "excessively static sub-system of social control." Its image is "to a large extent rendered sacred and ritualized by texts more understandable to officialdom than to the public." It can be termed "discriminatory" because it is exercized against traditional forms of crimes and is unable to act against "socially harmful acts made immune because they were historically built into the political and economic structure."

The report also points to the "guilded" criminals — men with political and economic power — who can escape detection. They may be compared to some law functionaries who abuse their power, but remain unpunished.

TOWN TALK

Fancy a stroll in a huge grassy hole?

That's what Victorians will be able to do by the spring, say the developers of the hotel-apartment-commercial complex at Laurel Point.

Although construction is under way for the first phase of the project, the condominium apartments and luxury townhouses, the hotel itself has been deferred for an unstated period.

So by the spring the developers plan to grass over the hotel site, to make it look as decent as possible until construction starts.

City council wondered last week whether it would be practical to landscape the excavations, but Canadian Freehold Properties represenatives assured aldermen it would.

They said the public around the foreshore — which the firm must provide under its land-use contract — will also be ready by the spring.

One Victoria resident, at least, is less than thrilled about city council's recent decision to prohibit under its anti-noise bylaw locomotive whistling and bell ringing at two railway crossings in Victoria West.

"At a time when society is concerned with safety your action could cost lives and you could be accused of causing them," warns G. C. Vivian, 27 Gorge Road, in a letter to City Hall.

He points out that the railway has been there for 78 years, and Vic West residents must have been aware of it when they moved in.

The Joke's on You!

From the masters of the art Town Talk had hoped to bring you this week a jest or two, some mirthful merriment, to help you forget the woes of inflation, strikes and all the rest.

Alas, 'twas not to be.

For when our faithful scribe approached the jokesperson of an organization called the Royal Order of Jesters, which was holding its weekend convention at The Empress, the fellow politely refused to be interviewed.

Goodness no, he said, it's a very private group and they never, but never, seek any publicity.

A pity. Well never mind, did you hear the one about . . .

What is it that makes an otherwise law-abiding citizen thumb his nose at authority by stoking up his stinking backyard incinerator at illegal times?

Oak Bay must have the most compulsive incinerator-users in the nation and they didn't resist the urge on the Labor Day weekend.

The municipality has a bylaw (effective June to the end of September) which allows burning only from dawn to 11 a.m. on weekdays. No burning is allowed on Sundays, Dominion Day, B.C. Day or Labor Day.

Reminders are even sent out with water bills — along with warnings against burning grass clippings or putting vegetable peelings and discarded food on compost heaps. All to little avail in some neighborhoods.

The little lady of the house is among the worst offenders. There she is in her nightgown and curlers getting her morning jollies by stuffing Old Stinky and polluting the neighborhood.

Could a psychiatrist explain this burning desire?

Today's the day Nanaimo St. resident R. Peter Boone said Victoria was going to sink beneath the waves unless there was a "spiritual change" in people around here.

Boone made his prediction last May 26, that all land below a line running from the Saanich Peninsula through Killarney Lake to Macaulay Point would sink Sept. 9.

Town Talk had no luck reaching Boone today. Maybe he decided not to stick around for the holocaust.

Here's the language proposed:

". . . the district . . . may enter upon, break up, take or enter into possession of, and use any real or personal property within the district not publicly owned where necessary or convenient for any of the purposes of the district without the consent of the owners of the real or personal property, but subject to division (4) or part XII of theMunicipal Act."

At a time when the British capital's tourist industry is reported to be suffering from the carnage of recent bomb terrorism in hotels and restaurants, it seems ironical that the Toronto office of the British Tourist Authority should be trying to lure Canadians to London with tales of historical horrors.

The London Dungeon, says a BTA press release, is the "latest attraction for bloodthirsty visitors."

In ghoulish gloating the blurb continues: "next door to Tower Bridge subway station and across the river from the Tower of London, the dark, cold ex-wine vaults depict the blackest pages of British history in a series of tableaux: disease and demons, murders and martyrs, tortures and sacrifice. This new macabre museum is open daily."

Macabre p.r., we call it. And by the way, what is — or was — ex-wine?

That would appear to be the underlying message of two news items in the current edition of the Campbell River Courier.

One reports that 30 per cent of Campbell River residents interviewed during a community needs survey had never heard of the department of human resources.

Another says that same department is receiving "an increasing caseload of strikers seeking welfare as the forest industry shutdown continues."

Presumably, then, the aware 70 per cent of the population included a high proportion of forest industry employees.

Much good may it do them, for the newspaper offers this quote from a department spokesman: "Basically, our policy is not to grant welfare to strikers."

L. F. Murray, chief curator of the Canadian War Museum in Ottawa, is appealing for officers and, particularly, seamen's uniforms from the Second World War and postwar periods.

12 Pages Of Tax Protests

Organized by an ad hoc committee, the residents have submitted a 12-page petition of signatures to Saanich council.

The petition states that the area, which the residents claim has the minimum of municipal services, has had the highest increase in property taxes — 26 per cent.

Dated Aug. 25, copies of the petition have been sent to Premier Dave Barrett and other members of the provincial government.

The petition objects to the manner in which savings accrued during the three-month lockout were immediately lost through accelerating costs of municipal government.

Eric McMorran of 5110 Cordova Bay Road didn't sign the petition because he wasn't contacted but agrees the area is badly serviced for the amount of taxes residents must pay.

False Alarm Breaks Sleep

A false alarm aboard a tug caused Fairfield residents to wake to the sound of a helicopter at 5 a.m. today.

A Pacific Rescue Co-ordination Centre spokesman said a U.S. coast guard helicopter was called to investigate an emergency signal being monitored on the emergency frequency.

The helicopter traced the signal to the Vancouver-based tug Evco Breeze. She had a search initiator buoy aboard and the buoy's emergency signal had been tripped inadvertently.

Region Director Quits In 'Total Frustration'

Victoria Times
TUESDAY, SEPT. 9, 1975 15
SECOND SECTION

Ken Rainey, only original member of the Capital Regional Board, has resigned as director "because of the total frustration in trying to represent a rural area on a board dominated by the four core municipalities."

Rainey represented Metchosin and was appointed by the provincial government when the regional board was formed almost 10 years ago, winning re-election since then.

Although his current term is up at the end of the year, he said he couldn't wait until then.

"I feel helpless in trying to represent my district and this is the only thing I can honestly do."

Among reasons for his resignation:

— regional planners ignoring the wishes of Metchosin residents by including residential development in a proposed community plan.

— long-delayed hospital development, caused primarily by Victoria, which should have made provision for better rural coverage long before now.

— "doctoring" of a soil removal bylaw by the provincial government so it fails to provide the intended protection in rural areas.

— a "drifting away" from the board thinking regionally to a policy of "city first, rural second."

On the community plan for the so-called western community, which includes Metchosin, Rainey said "I've had it up to here with the planning department ignoring our wishes."

"They told me that the province is buying land in the area and they were trying to accommodate provincial housing plans in the western sector. This is not their job — to cater to the province. They must abide by the law, the same as Joe Blow."

Rainey said he has been able to reduce the size of encroachment but not eliminate it.

The community plan is still in the draft stage and will be examined at further public meetings before going to the regional board.

Board chairman Jim Campbell said today he regrets Rainey's decision and has tried without success to talk him out of it.

"I can't agree with everything he says but I experience the same sort of frustration he does . . . If hospitals were a dominant interest of mine, I think I'd be out of my mind."

On hospitals, Rainey said the city of Victoria, in an effort to maintain Victoria General Hospital, has been a major factor in hospital construction delays which have continued for years.

"If it wasn't for Stephen (former Victoria Mayor Hugh Stephen) we would have had a hospital somewhere on the peninsula or in the Helmcken area long before now."

Although various past reports suggested a hospital outside the city centre, the city deliberately held matters up until it got its way on Victoria General.

The situation has now gone full circle, he said, with the region once again looking for a hospital site in the outer area.

"But now land values have skyrocketed as well as the cost of construction."

Rainey, a machinist for a city firm, said the regional board has become too big for a working man to adequately represent an area.

"I spend one day a week trying to get information but the Capital Regional Board is now too big and too complex. In the beginning it was okay because we only had hospitals and parks and you could do the job properly. But not now.

"If the taxpayers want representation, they will have to pay for it . . . it's the only way. I've lost a lot of wages over board business and it can't continue."

J. M. (Mac) Tipton, Rainey's alternate on the board, will take his place on the board for the balance of the year. The seats of all seven directors from electoral areas are up for election in November.

LANDLORD CHARGED

Bale Khudra, a landlord at 614 Esquimalt Rd., was remanded to Dec. 8.

Defence lawyer Herbert Matthews plans to dispute provincial court's jurisdiction to handle any of the charges.

Charges against Khudra allege rent increases between Feb. 28 and July 24 given without three months' notice and above the legal 10.6 per cent increase limit.

Khudra is also charged with unlawful eviction of four tenants.

He appeared before Judge Edmond St. Jorre who told the court he has acted as legal counsel for Khudra and his family in the past and should not judge the case.

"Not only should justice be done, but it should appear to be done," said St. Jorre.

Laymore Lay-Off

Rising costs and old age has resulted in the paying off of the navy's auxiliary vessel Laymore on Feb. 15.

Her useable stores and equipment will be removed and she will be put on the market by the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation.

Her master, Capt. M. H. J. Dyer and crew of 25 will be transferred to other jobs at CFB Esquimalt.

Built in Kewanee, Wisconsin, in 1945 for the Royal Canadian Navy, for the past four years the Laymore has been kept afloat by a cost-sharing arrangement between the department of national defence and the federal department of the environment.

Three-quarters of her cost and work was for the environment department during the four years.

Environment department spokesman Dr. Bill English said today escalating costs and shrinking resources had forced the department to terminate the Laymore contract. He said she cost the department $300,000 a year to operate.

"We are definitely feeling the pinch," he said. "We had to come to the point somewhere along the line. She's a fine old ship but the cost went up and up and up each time she had to have a refit."

English said the gap left by the Laymore will be filled by contracting out oceanographic services and the use of charter vessels.

He said a five-year charter of the Pandora II from an east coast company would relieve the situation.

"She (Pandora) was fitted and built especially for our purpose," he explained.

Originally designed for service in the Pacific, the Laymore was used as a supply vessel, ammunition carrier and coastal freighter prior to her conversion to an oceanographic vessel in 1966.

She has also been used as a mine-layer and recovery vessel for joint Canadian-United States naval exercises.

As an oceanographic research vessel, the Laymore has served the Defence Research Board, the Defence Research Establishment (Pacific), as well as the University of Victoria, Simon Fraser University and the University of British Columbia.

No Blues, Good News: Trustees

The sex and birth control manual Rhythm and Blues got short shrift from most trustees Monday when it was brought before Greater Victoria school board's curriculum committee.

"A degrading book," Trustee Daphne Temple called it.

"Sleazy, tawdry, . . . completely lacking in any sort of moral fibre," said trustee Peter Bunn.

"Frivolous, fanciful," said board chairman Bill Ross.

"I think it treats sex with the same degree of delicacy and dignity as the barnyard bull," said trustee Janet Baird.

"I realize that this publication is not in fact an ideal one," said Dr. Mark Fisher, who was proposing that the school board approve use of the controversial manual in high schools until better publications are available.

TEMPLE

Fisher said his work as a physician has made him realize the need for some booklet for teenagers on birth control and veneral disease.

Victoria has an incredibly high abortion rate, he said, and B.C. has the highest abortion rate in the country.

"VD is on the rise in a colossal way," he said.

Fisher got support only from trustee Phil Perry, who said that in his work as head of the Attendance Centre he has seen the need for a booklet like Rhythm and Blues, despite the "many, many mistakes" in the booklet.

The booklet was published under a 1973 Local Initiatives Project grant.

Trustees voted not to refer Fisher's proposal to Monday's board meeting, so the matter will be dropped.

Ginnell Keeping Sharp Eye on Goaltenders

By JIM CRERAR
Times Staff

Victoria Cougars opened training camp Monday with 90 hands on deck at Juan de Fuca Arena, but you can be sure that one area owner-coach Pat Ginnell will watch closely is goal.

What happened to the Cougars in last spring's Western Canada Hockey League playoff series against New Westminster Bruins has been haunting Ginnell all summer.

The way he sees it, the Bruins "stole" the series because of goaltending. There's no denying Gord Laxton who signed Monday with Pittsburgh Penguins, played a whale of a series, but Ginnell is of the opinion that had Gerry Simpson been healthy enough to tend goal for Cougars, the outcome would have been reversed.

Simpson, who moved up from Nanaimo Clippers of the B.C. Junior League, missed the series with torn ligaments and Cougars ended up in the Memorial Cup discard pile.

Simpson is back and he's been tabbed as an inside-tracker for netminding duties, along with Nanaimo graduate Danny Rogers and Steve Amiss, a Quesnel minor hockey product who was voted the top goalie in last year's national midget final.

In the long run, however, a goalie is only as good as the defence in front of him. There are two kinds of defencemen — rushers and checkers — and Ginnell is looking to tighten up the backchecking this year.

"I'm looking for another good defensive defenceman," he said following Monday afternoon's skating and scrimmage session. "We have two good rushers in Tim Williams and Gordie Roberts and we've got a good backup man in Lorry Gloeckner."

Gloeckner, a backchecking specialist, impressed Monday. He showed up in peak condition after a summer of Junior "A" lacrosse with Victoria McDonalds. In fact, he weighed in at 190, five pounds less than his playing weight last spring.

Ginnell has his eye on a two more defence candidates with backchecking ability. One is Ken Bueckert, 17-year-old brother of former Cougar goalie Glen Bueckert. He's up from the Clippers. The other is also a Nanaimo product, 16-year-old Leroy Heck.

LINE RUSHES — Perry Schnarr, a 17-year-old forward who scored 64 goals and 50 assists with Kelowna of the B.C. Junior League last season, was a no-show Monday. "The last I heard, he's gone back to Kelowna," said Ginnell, who was hoping to have him in camp . . .

Ginnell had newcomer Jeff McDill, acquired last week from Flin Flon, hooked up on left wing with centre Jim Gustafson in Monday's scrimmages. Another unit consisted of holdover Al Hill at centre, Danny Lucas at right wing and Kurt Fraser on the left side . . . Defenceman Gordie Roberts is still growing, it seems. He reported 10 pounds heavier than last year, weighing in at 195 . . . Biggest player in camp is defenceman Dave Beardsworth from Innisfail, Alta. He's 6'3" and weighs 210 . . . Peter Morris graduated from Cougars last spring but his younger brother, David, is in camp.

There's a California hockey player in camp, too. He's 19-year-old right-winger Brian Simpson from the Los Angeles area. Ginnell saw him at recent hockey school in Penticton . . . There was some heavy hitting in Monday's morning workout but the afternoon session was mostly skating and scrimmaging. Similar sessions continue at Juan de Fuca through Friday with drills at 10 a.m. and 12 noon, lasting until 2 p.m.

Fishing: My Friends, Those Killer Whales

NOTES AND LIKE THAT: A few years ago while out fishing with fellow staffer Pete Medwid, we ran into a pod, or maybe two, of killer whales, which isn't unusual in these parts; at the time the question arose: was this a dangerous situation in which to be? Because you can imagine what the reaction might be if two visitors, from say the prairies, happened to be off Race Rocks and had the same experience.

At any rate I phoned the late Dr. Clifford Carl, who was the provincial museum curator at that time, and he quickly put my mind at ease.

He explained then that the killer whale was really a friendly type, its name actually was a misnomer, there never had been an authenticated case on record of a killer whale attacking a boat, or humans, and there was little possibility either of a whale accidentally tipping a boat as it had a built-in radar system second to none. And, if that was the only worry, to go right on fishing and let the whale make corrections in its course, which it would do.

And thus, that has been the rule lo, these many moons since; and in that time your agent has come to admire these striking mammals of the deep, more and more.

This is so, even if they often ruin the fishing for a time: because after all, why would they be there if there weren't any fish around?

★ ★ ★

For example, twice at Rivers Inlet my arrival has been simultaneous with that of the killer whales and, on each occasion the mighty spring salmon, lurking in those murky waters, appeared to have been spooked for at least two days after the whales' visit; and results were very poor indeed.

Last week off Beechey Head, it was a similar story. Well, almost.

The weather was fine and the catch prospects, judging from previous results, good; when suddenly the familiar sight of that distinctive curved fin loomed on the horizon, to be followed by another, then about six more, then four and finally about 22 in all.

Every sports fisherman from that area and others on the Island knows the pattern well. This time, however, there was a difference, however slight, that attracted attention. It was one of aesthetics, if you like, nature being at its spectacular best.

For one of the larger whales was either more frisky or more accomplished than his playmates; it was coming clear out of the water almost every time it surfaced, then going into the equivalent of a half-roll and finally slapping the water with its tail when it landed, to repeat the performance about every 10 seconds later.

By the meticulous use of simple mathematics, it was determined that this frivolous whale, provided it kept on schedule, should pass by our boat at the same moment it would perform its half-roll trick and, having a camera aboard, wouldn't that make a great picture?

And thus, with camera at the ready, action stations were manned. Then came the hitch. The playful one didn't appear on schedule for whatever reason. But his pals did. And by design or otherwise, their arrival might have been even more spectacular. It certainly was more surprising. And if you've ever been looking for a whale from one side of a boat with an eye glued to a camera and suddenly their is the sound of a mighty "whoosh" directly in arrears, and less than 20 feet away, believe it, well . . . you get the idea!

And not only one, but two whales surfaced, directly alongside. The key word is "directly". They then ducked under the starboard rod, their markings clearly visible under the water and, as a parting gesture, scraped the line as they continued on their merry way.

If the fishing didn't improve after their visit, that was probably to be expected. Still, it is rather comforting to know that killer whales are indeed friendly even if sometimes they have an odd way of showing it.

The picture? Are you kiddin'? There were other things to do.

Burrards Will Present Italian Roadrunner Hour

VANCOUVER (CP) — Vancouver Burrards plan to make good use of the Italian Roadrunners when they open the Mann Cup lacrosse championships tonight against Brampton Excelsiors.

Vancouver coach Ross McDonald made extensive use of Bellusci when the Burrards defeated Victoria Shamrocks 4-1 in the finals of the Western Lacrosse Association.

Bellusci played in the final two games of the best-of-seven series, and scored eight goals and added four assists. Five of the goals came in the last game of the series.

The three juniors have an old team-mate already playing with the Burrards. Ron Pinder scored 64 goals this year in his rookie season in senior competition.

McDonald, who performed in 16 Mann Cup games himself as a player, looks for the Burrards to redeem themselves for their 1973 loss to Peterborough in the Mann Cup, which was a sudden-death game. This series is a best-of-three series, with the second game Thursday and the third, if necessay, Friday. All games will be played here.

"The players have long memories," McDonald said Monday, "and the club wants to win the Mann Cup for the Vancouver fans."

Seven members of the Burrards have played for the Canadian senior championship before, led by powerful defenceman Bob Salt.

Te 6-foot, 210-pound Salt has played in four previous Mann Cup series. He was named the most valuable player of the WLA playoffs.

Goaltender Don Hamilton, Gord Frederickson, Bill Rawson, Ward Sanderson, Dennis Quigley and Steve Matheson also have played for the national title previously.

Hamilton played in the 1961 series and recorded the only shutout in Mann Cup history when Vancouver blanked Brampton 13-0. Hamilton still plays with a lot of spirit despite his age—38—and recently scored a goal in the first game of the finals against Victoria.

Brampton, the Eastern Canada senior champions, goes into the series as the underdog, but the Burrards aren't taking the Excelsiors lightly.

Liske Likes Way Ross Finds Holes in Zones

WINNIPEG (CP) — A newcomer who stung the Winnipeg Blue Bomber secondary in their last meeting with British Columbia Lions likely will be buzzing around again tonight in a return encounter.

Flanker Ross Clarkson, a product of Simon Fraser University (SFU), drew his first starting assignment with the Lions last Thursday and made his presence felt.

The 5-foot-10, 175-pounder caught four Peter Liske passes for 116 yards, including a 68-yard touchdown strike, as the Lions defeated the Bombers 29-17.

Liske says he likes to throw to the elusive Clarkson because he can get into the open quickly "and knows where to find the holes in the zone defences."

Clarkson first joined the Lions in 1973 but saw limited action. He sat out the 1974 season for a little globetrotting, visiting places in Europe and Mexico before returning to Vancouver for another try at football.

He began the current season riding the bench as a backup to regular flanker Brock Aynsley and split end Slade Willis.

While Liske hopes to employ Clarkson in another successful assault against Winnipeg, the Bombers are out to avenge their last defeat.

"After the Saskatchewan game, Ron Lancaster and I were talking and he told me it was the best game he'd ever seen Chuck Ealey call," Riley said of the 27-23 loss to the Roughriders.

"I thought he did a pretty good job in Vancouver, too. Our offence got over 400 yards in Regina and over 300 against the Lions. You can't ask for much more than that."

Greg Neeld Files Anti-Trust Suit

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Greg Neeld, a Canadian junior hockey player who continued to play the sport despite the loss of an eye two years ago, filed a $4.5 million anti-trust suit Monday against the National Hockey League.

The suit claims the NHL and its member teams have conspired to prevent Neeld, 20, from becoming a professional player even though he was selected by Buffalo Sabres in the fourth round of the NHL's June draft of amateurs.

Neeld played last year for Calgary Centennials of the Western Canada Hockey League. He was with Toronto Marlboros of the Ontario Hockey Association Major Junior A series in the 1973-74 season when he lost sight in his left eye from a stick accident during a league game.

Neeld is asking $1.5 million in damages, which would be trebled under U.S. anti-trust laws.

The NHL has a rule prohibiting players with less than 25 per cent vision in an eye.

England in Final

A goal by Janet Jurischka at 20 minutes of the first half moved England into Wednesday's final against the winner of today's match between the Netherlands and Wales.

In other games in the top section Monday, Wales edged Australia 2-1, India defeated Belgium 2-1 and Scotland blanked Spain 3-0.

Engine Woes Halt Forsyth

Reg Kennedy of Surrey won the points title after a seventh-place finish here Sunday in the last race of the series. Eric Wowler of Edmonton led from the start to finish to win the race. He finished second in points, 14 behind Kennedy's 641 total.

Forsyth, who was tied for second in points at one stage of series, lost his engine on lap 30 of the200-lap main event and finished out of the running.

Chalk Players Love Sandy

Times News Service

Jockey Sandy Hawley, whose travels give meaning to the term journeyman rider, made the chalk players happy Monday at Exhibition Park in Vancouver.

Hawley, Canada's leading rider the past five years, was on his second visit here from Toronto and took three mounts on the card. Two of them were winners while the other finished sixth.

Hawley's first winner came aboard Darshan's Reward ($3.00) in the second. Johnny Two Dance ($3.50) was his second winner in the seventh.

The 26-year-old Hawley achieved his greatest fame two years ago when he became the first jockey to ride more than 500 winners in a season. He was accompanied on his visit this time by agent Colin Wick.

Wick said he and Hawley have no plans to improve on his 1973 riding performance. To achieve the 515 winners Hawley had to ride more than 1,900 mounts at tracks from coast to coast in both Canada and the U.S.

The next objective for Hawley, said Wick, is the money championship in North America.

The Islanders, who exploded for six runs in a wild fifth inning, won the best-of-seven league playoff series, 4-2.

100 MILE HOUSE (CP) — Dave Barr of Kelowna fired an even-par 72 Sunday at the 108-Mile Golf Club to win the $6,000 Cariboo Open tournament with a 36-hole total of 139.

Winner of the B.C. Open this year, Barr posted a five-under-par 67 in Saturday's opening round to share first place with Bob Cox of Vancouver and Mark Shushak of Ontario.

Cox was second at 140 and Shushak tied for third at 142 with Walter Owen of Illinois.

TV Dispute Ending

TORONTO (CP) — The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation reported Monday it has learned that a compromise agreement has been reached on European television broadcast rights for the 1976 Olympics in Montreal.

The CBC said one of its correspondents had learned that the Montreal Olympic Organizing Committee had reached agreement in principle with the European Broadcasting Union and details of the agreement were to be announced Friday.

The compromise price for the TV rights was reported to be $10 million, well short of the $16.2 million the Canadian organizers had been seeking. The EBU had previously refused to pay more than $8.2 million.

Earlier Monday, the EBU announced in London it had extended until next Monday the deadline for completing negotiations.
